

LETTERS OF
HORACE WALPOLE

MRS. PAGET TOYNBEE

HENRY FROWDE
PUBLISHER TO THE UNIVERSITY
LONDON, EDINBURGH,
NEW YORK

Two hundred and sixty copies have been printed on hand-made paper this is Number 140.

Horace Walpole
from a print after Falconet.

THE LETTERS OF
HORACE WALPOLE

FOURTH EARL OF ORFORD

CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED AND EDITED WITH NOTES AND INDICES BY

MRS. F. D. M. M. M. M. M.

IN SIXTEEN VOLUMES WITH PORTRAITS AND FACSIMILES

VOL. VI: 1764—1766

OXFORD
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

MDCCCIV

OXFORD

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON

BY HORACE HART, M.A.

PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

CONTENTS OF VOL. VI

	PAGE
LIST OF PORTRAITS . . . . .	v
LIST OF LETTERS IN VOLUME VI . . . . .	vii-x
LETTERS 934-1114 . . . . .	1-46

LIST OF PORTRAITS

HORACE WALPOLE . . . . . Frontispiece
From print after Falconet.

SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON, K.B. . . . . To face p. 83
From painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds in National Portrait Gallery.

GEORGE WALPOLE, THIRD EARL OF ORFORD . . . . . 216
From painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds in possession of Earl Waldegrave.

CHARLES LENNOX, THIRD DUKE OF RICHMOND . . . . . 367
From a print.

LIST OF LETTERS IN VOL. VI

T			C
		1764.
934	Feb. 15, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	902
935	Feb. 20, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . .	903
936	Feb. 21, 1764 . . .	Miss Anne Pitt.
937	[Feb. 1764] . . .	Rev. William Cole . . .	899
938	Feb. 23, 1764 . . .	Sir David Dalrymple . . .	904
939	Feb. 24, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	905
940	Feb. 29, 1764 . . .	Grosvenor Bedford . . .	906
941	March 3, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . .	907
942	March 11, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	908
943	March 18, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . .	909
944	March 18, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	910
945	March 27, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	911
946	March 27, 1764 . . .	Charles Churchill . . .	912
947	April 5, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	913
948	April 9, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . .	914
949	April 12, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	915
950	April 12, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . .	916
951	April 19, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway	917
952	April 20, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	918
953†	April 20, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann.
954	April 21, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway	919
955	April 24, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway	921
956	May 10, 1764 . . .	George Montagu. . . .	923
957	May 14, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . .	924
958	May 27, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	925
959	June 5, 1764 . . .	Thomas Pitt. . . .	926
960	June 5, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway	927
961	June 8, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford. . . .	928
962	June 8, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . .	929
963	June 18, 1764 . . .	George Montagu. . . .	930
964	[July 2, 1764]. . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway.
965	July 16, 1764 . . .	George Montagu. . . .	931
966	July 16, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . .	932
967	July 21, 1764 ‡ . . .	Rev. Henry Zouch . . .	933
968	July 21, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . .	934

† Now printed for the first time.

‡ Misdated; see note on this letter.

T		C
969	July 27, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 935
970	July 30, 1764 . . .	Grosvenor Bedford . . . 936
971	Aug. 3, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 937
972	Aug. 9, 1764 . . .	Christopher Wren.
973	Aug. 13, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 938
974	Aug. 16, 1764 . . .	George Montagu . . . 939
975	Aug. 21, 1764 . . .	Viscount Nuneham.
976	Aug. 27, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 940
977	Aug. 29, 1764 . . .	William Pitt . . . 941
978	Aug. 29, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . 942
979	Sept. 1, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway 943
980	Sept. 3, 1764 . . .	Dr. Birch . . . 944
981	Sept. 25, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole.
982†	[Sept. 1764] . . .	Duke of Newcastle.
983†	[Sept. 1764] . . .	Duke of Newcastle.
984	Oct. 5, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 945
985	Oct. 5, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway 946
986	Oct. 9, 1764 . . .	Rev. Thomas Warton . . 947
987	Oct. 13, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway 948
988	Oct. 21, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 949
989	[Oct. 1764] . . .	Rev. William Cole.
990	Oct. 27, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole.
991	Oct. 29, 1764 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway 950
992	Oct. 30, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole.
993	Nov. 1, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 951
994	Nov. 8, 1764 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . 952
995	Nov. 9, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 953
996	Nov. 10, 1764 . . .	Lady Hervey . . . 954
997	Nov. 15, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 955
998	Nov. 25, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 956
999	Dec. 3, 1764 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 957
1000	Dec. 16, 1764 . . .	George Montagu . . . 958
1001	Dec. 20, 1764 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 959
1002	Christmas Eve, 1764 .	George Montagu . . . 960
1765.
1003	Jan. 10, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 961
1004	Jan. 13, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 962
1005	Jan. 20, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 963
1006	Jan. 27, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 964
1007†	Feb. 5, 1765 . . .	Rev. Thomas Percy.
1008	Feb. 11, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 965

† Now printed for the first time.

T	C
1009 Feb. 12, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 966
1010 Feb. 19, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 967
1011 Feb. 28, 1765 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . 968
1012 March 9, 1765 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . 969
1013 March 16, 1765 . . .	Dr. Warton . . . 970
1014 March 18, 1765 . . .	Élie de Beaumont . . . 971
1015 March 26, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 972
1016 March 26, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 973
1017 April 5, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 974
1018 April 7, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 975
1019 April 17, 1765 . . .	Rev. William Mason . . . 976
1020 April 18, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 977
1021 April 21, 1765 . . .	Sir David Dalrymple . . . 978
1022 May 5, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 979
1023 May 11, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 980
1024 May 12, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 981
1025 May 14, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 982
1026 May 20, 1765 . . .	Earl of Hertford . . . 983
1027 May 25, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 984
1028 May 26, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 985
1029 June 10, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 986
1030 June 11, 1765 . . .	Lady Hervey . . . 987
1031 June 26, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 988
1032 Saturday night . . .	George Montagu . . . 989
1033 July 3, 1765 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway 990
1034 July 3, 1765 . . .	Countess of Suffolk . . . 991
1035 July 9, 1765 . . .	Countess of Suffolk . . . 992
1036 July 11, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 993
1037 July 12, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 994
1038 July 28, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 995
1039 July 30, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 996
1040 Aug. 9, 1765 . . .	Miss Anne Pitt . . . 997
1041 Aug. 12, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 998
1042 Aug. 28, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 999
1043 Aug. 27, 1765 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . 1000
1044 Aug. 31, 1765 . . .	George Montagu . . . 1001
1045 Sept. 3, 1765 . . .	Earl of Strafford . . . 1002
1046 Sept. 3, 1765 . . .	Lady Hervey . . . 1003
1047 Sept. 5, 1765 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . 1004
1048 Sept. 5, 1765 . . .	Grosvenor Bedford . . . 1005
1049 Sept. 11, 1765 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway 1006
1050 Sept. 14, 1765 . . .	Lady Hervey . . . 1007
1051 Sept. 18, 1765 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . 1007

T

1052	Sept. 20, 1765.	. .	Countess of Suffolk . . .
1053	Sept. 22, 1765.	. .	George Montagu . . .
1054	Sept. 26, 1765.	. .	Sir Horace Mann . . .
1055	Oct. 3, 1765 . . .	. .	Lady Hervey . . .
1056	Oct. 3, 1765 . . .	. .	John Chute . . .
1057	Oct. 6, 1765 . . .	. .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway
1058	Oct. 8, 1765 . . .	. .	Miss Anne Pitt.
1059	Oct. 13, 1765 . . .	. .	Lady Hervey . . .
1060	Oct. 15, 1765 . . .	. .	Lady Mary Coke.
1061	Oct. 16, 1765 . . .	. .	George Montagu . . .
1062	Oct. 16, 1765 . . .	. .	Countess of Suffolk . . .
1063	Oct. 16, 1765 . . .	. .	Sir Horace Mann . . .
1064	Oct. 19, 1765 . . .	. .	Thomas Brand . . .
1065	Oct. 28, 1765 . . .	. .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway
1066	Nov. 2, 1765 . . .	. .	Sir Horace Mann . . .
1067	Nov. 4, 1765 . . .	. .	Miss Anne Pitt.
1068	Nov. 13, 1765 . . .	. .	Sir Horace Mann . . .
1069	Nov. 17, 1765 . . .	. .	Lady Mary Coke.
1070	Nov. 19, 1765 . . .	. .	Thomas Gray . . .
1071	Nov. 20, 1765 . . .	. .	Grosvenor Bedford . . .
1072	Nov. 21, 1765 . . .	. .	Lady Hervey . . .
1073	Nov. 21, 1765 . . .	. .	George Montagu . . .
1074	Nov. 23, 1765 . . .	. .	Lady Hervey . . .
1075	Nov. 29, 1765 . . .	. .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway
1076	Nov. 30, 1765 . . .	. .	Sir Horace Mann . . .
1077	Dec. 2, 1765 . . .	. .	George Augustus Selwyn
1078	Dec. 5, 1765 . . .	. .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway
1079	Dec. 5, 1765 . . .	. .	Countess of Suffolk . . .
1080	Dec. 25, 1765 . . .	. .	Miss Anne Pitt.

1766.

1081	Jan. 2, 1766 . . .	. .	Lady Hervey . . .
1082	Jan. 4, 1766 . . .	. .	Lady Mary Coke.
1083	Jan. 5, 1766 . . .	. .	Sir Horace Mann . . .
1084	Jan. 5, 1766 . . .	. .	George Montagu . . .
1085	[Jan. 8, 1766]. . .	. .	John Chute . . .
1086	Jan. 11, 1766 . . .	. .	Lady Hervey . . .
1087	Jan. 12, 1766 . . .	. .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway
1088	Jan. 18, 1766 . . .	. .	Rev. William Cole . . .
1089	Jan. 19, 1766 . . .	. .	Miss Anne Pitt.
1090	Jan. 25, 1766 . . .	. .	Thomas Gray . . .
1090*	Jan. 31, 1766 . . .	. .	George Augustus Selwyn.

List of Letters

xi

T

1091	Feb. 3, 1766 . . .	Lady Hervey . . . .	1039
1092	Feb. 4, 1766 . . .	George Montagu . . . .	1040
1093	Feb. 9, 1766 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . .	1041
1094	Feb. 23 [1766] . . .	George Montagu . . . .	1042
1095	Feb. 28, 1766 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . .	1043
1096	Feb. 29, 1766 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . .	1044
1097	March 1, 1766 . . .	Miss Anne Pitt.
1098	March 3, 1766 . . .	George Montagu . . . .	1045
1099	March 3, 1766 . . .	Lady Mary Coke.
1100	March 6, 1766 . . .	John Craufurd . . . .	1046
1100*	March 7, 1766 . . .	George Augustus Selwyn.
1101	March 7, 1766 . . .	Miss Anne Pitt.
1102	March 10, 1766 . . .	Lady Hervey . . . .	1047
1103	March 12, 1766 . . .	George Montagu . . . .	1048
1104	March 21, 1766 . . .	George Montagu . . . .	1049
1105	March 21, 1766 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . .	1050
1106	April 3, 1766 . . .	George Montagu . . . .	1051
1107	April 6, 1766 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway	1052
1108	April 8, 1766 . . .	Hon. Henry Seymour Conway	1053
1109	April 20, 1766 . . .	Sir Horace Mann . . . .	1054
1110	May 6, 1766 . . .	Lord Hailes (?) . . . .	1055
1111	[6 Mai 1766] . . .	Duchesse de Choiseul.
1112	May 10, 1766 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . .	1056
1113	May 13, 1766 . . .	Rev. William Cole . . . .	1057
1114	[May 1766] . . .	Rev. William Cole.

THE LETTERS

OF

HORACE WALPOLE

934. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

MY DEAR LORD,      Arlington Street, Wednesday, Feb. 15, 1764.

You ought to be witness to the fatigue I am suffering, before you can estimate the merit I have in being writing to you at this moment. Cast up eleven hours in the House of Commons on Monday, and above seventeen hours yesterday,—ay, seventeen at length,—and then you may guess if I am tired! nay, you must add seventeen hours that I may possibly be there on Friday, and then calculate if I am weary. In short, yesterday was the longest day ever known in the House of Commons—why, on the Westminster election at the end of my father's reign<sup>1</sup>, I was at home by six. On Alexander Murray's<sup>2</sup> affair, I believe, by five—on the militia, twenty people, I think, sat till six, but then they were only among themselves, no heat, no noise, no roaring. It was half an hour after seven this morning before I was at home. Think of that, and then brag of your French parliaments!

What is ten times greater, Leonidas and the Spartan minority did not make such a stand at Thermopylæ, as we did. Do you know, we had like to have been the majority? Xerxes<sup>3</sup> is frightened out of his senses; Sysigambis<sup>4</sup> has

LETTER 934.—<sup>1</sup> In January 1742.

<sup>2</sup> In February 1751, during the proceedings against Hon. Alexander Murray in connection with the Westminster election petition.

<sup>3</sup> George III.

<sup>4</sup> The Princess Dowager of Wales.

sent an express to Luton to forbid Phraates<sup>s</sup> coming to town to-morrow: Norton's impudence has forsaken him. Bishop Warburton is at this moment reinstating Mr. name in the dedication to his Sermons, which he has expunged for Sandwich's; and Sandwich himself is—perhaps, by this time, for the first thing I expect to-morrow is, that he is gone off.

Now are you mortally angry with me for trifling with you, and not telling you at once the particulars of the almost-revolution. You may be angry, but I shall take my own time, and shall give myself what airs I please. I shall tell you, my Lord Ambassador, and to you, my Lord Secretary of State, who will, I suppose, open this letter—if you have courage enough left. In the first place, I assume the impertinence of a prophet,—ay, of that great and true prophet, who really prophesied before the events which whose predictions have been accomplished. Have I not, have I not, announced to you the unexpected blow which would be given to the administration?—come, I will lay aside my dignity, and satisfy your impatience. I will have moderation.

We sat all Monday hearing evidence against Mr. that dirty wretch Webb, and the messengers, for their proceedings against Mr. Wilkes. At midnight, Mr. Pitt offered us to adjourn or proceed. Mr. Pitt begged not to eat or sleep till so great a point should be decided. On a division, in which though many said for adjourning, nobody would go out for fear of losing their seats, it was carried by 379 to 31, for proceeding—almost—half the House went away. The ministers reproached the indecency of this, and Fitzherbert saying that they were within call, Stanley observed, that after voting for adjournment, a third part had adjourned themselves.

<sup>s</sup> The Earl of Bute; Luton was his country seat.

instead of being within call, they ought to have been within hearing: this was unanswerable, and we adjourned.

Yesterday we fell to again. It was one in the morning before the evidence was closed. Carrington, the messenger, was alone examined for seven hours. This old man, the cleverest of all ministerial terriers, was pleased with recounting his achievements, yet perfectly guarded and betraying nothing. However, the arcana imperii have been woefully laid open.

I have heard Garrick, and other players, give themselves airs of fatigue after a long part—think of the Speaker, nay, think of the clerks taking most correct minutes for sixteen hours, and reading them over to every witness; and then let me hear of fatigue! Do you know, not only my Lord Temple,—who you may swear never budged as spectator,—but old Will Chetwynd, now past eighty, and who had walked to the House, did not stir a single moment out of his place, from three in the afternoon till the division at seven in the morning. Nay, we had Patriotesses, too, who stayed out the whole: Lady Rockingham and Lady Sondes the first day; both again the second day, with Miss Mary Pelham<sup>6</sup>, Mrs. Fitzroy, and the Duchess of Richmond, as patriot as any of us. Lady Mary Coke, Mrs. George Pitt, and Lady Pembroke, came after the Opera, but I think did not stay above seven or eight hours at most.

At one, Sir W. Meredith moved a resolution of the illegality of the warrant, and opened it well. He was seconded by old Darlington's brother<sup>7</sup>, a convert to us. Mr. Wood, who had shone the preceding day by great modesty, decency, and ingenuity, forfeited these merits a good deal by starting up (according to a ministerial plan), and very arrogantly, and repeatedly in the night, demanding justice and a previous acquittal, and telling the House he scorned to accept being merely excused; to which Mr. Pitt replied, that if he disdained to be excused, he would deserve to be censured. Mr. Charles Yorke (who, with his family, have come roundly to us for support against the Duke of Bedford on the Marriage Bill) proposed to adjourn. Grenville and the ministry would have agreed to adjourn the debate on the great question itself, but declared they would push this acquittal. This they announced haughtily enough—for as yet, they did not doubt of their strength. Lord Frederick Campbell was the most impetuous of all, so little he foresaw how much wiser it would be to follow your brother. Pitt made a short speech, excellently argumentative, and not bombast, nor tedious, nor deviating from the question. He was supported by your brother, and Charles Townshend, and Lord George; the two last of whom are strangely firm, now they are got under the cannon of your brother:—Charles, who, as he must be extraordinary, is now so in romantic nicety of honour. His father<sup>8</sup>, who is dying, or dead, at Bath, and from whom he hopes two thousand a year, has sent for him. He has refused to go—lest his steadiness should be questioned. At a quarter after four we divided. Our cry was so loud, that both we and the ministers thought we had carried it. It is not to be painted, the dismay of the latter—in good truth not without reason, for we were 197, they but 207. Your experience can tell you, that a majority of but ten is a defeat. Amidst a great defection from them, was even a white staff, Lord Charles Spencer<sup>9</sup>—now you know still more of what I told you was preparing for them!

<sup>6</sup> Fourth daughter of Hon. Henry Pelham; d. unmarried.

<sup>7</sup> Hon. Gilbert Vane (d. 1772),

M.P. for Durham county, son of second Lord Barnard and brother of first Earl of Darlington.

<sup>8</sup> Charles Townshend, third Viscount Townshend; d. May 12, 1764.

<sup>9</sup> Lord Charles Spencer (d. 1820), second son of third Duke of Marlborough; M.P. for Oxfordshire; Comptroller of the Household, 1783–

85; Lord of the Admiralty, 1770–78; Treasurer of the Chamber, 1779–82; Joint Vice-Treasurer of Ireland, 1782–1801; Joint Postmaster-General, 1801–6.

Crestfallen, the ministers then proposed simply to discharge the complaint; but the plumes which they had dropped, Pitt soon placed in his own beaver. He broke out on liberty, and, indeed, on whatever he pleased, uninterrupted. Rigby sat feeling the vice-treasurership slipping from under him. Nugent was not less pensive—Lord Strange, though not interested<sup>10</sup>, did not like it. Everybody was too much taken up with his own concerns, or too much daunted, to give the least disturbance to the Pindaric. Grenville, however, dropped a few words, which did but heighten the flame. Pitt, with less modesty than ever he showed, pronounced a panegyric on his own administration, and from thence broke out on the dismission of officers. This increased the roar from us. Grenville replied, and very finely, very pathetically, very animated. He painted Wilkes and faction, and, with very little truth, denied the charge of menaces to officers. At that moment, General A'Court walked up the House—think what an impression such an incident must make, when passions, hopes, and fears, were all afloat—think, too, how your brother and I, had we been ungenerous, could have added to these sensations! There was a man not so delicate. Colonel Barré rose—and this attended with a striking circumstance; Sir Edward Deering, one of our noisy fools, called out, ‘Mr. Barré.’ The latter seized the thought with admirable quickness, and said to the Speaker, who, in pointing to him, had called him Colonel, ‘I beg your pardon, Sir, you have pointed to me by a title I have no right to,’ and then made a very artful and pathetic speech on his own services and dismissal; with nothing bad but an awkward attempt towards an excuse to Mr. Pitt for his former behaviour. Lord North, who will not lose his bellow, though he may lose his place, endeavoured to roar up the courage of his comrades, but it would not do—the House grew tired, and we again divided at seven for adjournment; some of our people were gone, and we remained but 184, they 208; however, you will allow our affairs are mended, when we say, but 184. We then came away, and left the ministers to satisfy Wood, Webb, and themselves, as well as they could. It was eight this morning before I was in bed; and considering that, this is no very short letter. Mr. Pitt bore the fatigue with his usual spirit—and even old Onslow, the late Speaker, was sitting up, anxious for the event.

<sup>10</sup> He was Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, but did not take the salary attached to the post.

On Friday we are to have the great question<sup>11</sup>, which would prevent my writing; and to-morrow I dine with Guerchy, at the Duke of Grafton's, besides twenty other engagements. To-day I have shut myself up; for with writing this, and taking notes yesterday all day, and all night, I have not an eye left to see out of—nay, for once in my life, I shall go to bed at ten o'clock.

I am glad to be able to contradict two or three passages in my last letter. The Prince and Princess of Brunswick are safely landed, though they were in extreme danger. The Duc de Pecquigny had not only been put in arrest late on the Sunday night, which I did not know, but has retrieved his honour. Monsieur de Guerchy sent him away, and at Dover, Virette found him, and whispered him to steal from D'Allonville and fight. The Duc first begged his pardon, owned himself in the wrong, and then fought him, and was wounded, though slightly, in four places in the arm; and both are returned to London with their honours as white as snow.

Sir Jacob Downing<sup>12</sup> is dead, and has left every shilling to his wife; id est, not sixpence to my Lord Holland; a mishap which, being followed by a minority of 197, will not make this a pleasant week to him.

<sup>11</sup> 'That a general warrant for seizing the author, printer, &c. of a seditious libel is not legal.'

<sup>12</sup> Sir Jacob Garrard Downing, fourth Baronet.

Well! now would you believe how I feel and how I wish? I wish we may continue the minority. The desires of some of my associates, perhaps, may not be satisfied, but mine are. Here is an opposition formidable enough to keep abler ministers than Messieurs the present gentlemen in awe. They may pick pockets, but they will pick no more locks. While we continue a minority, we shall preserve our characters, and we have some too good to part with. I hate to have a camp to plunder; at least, I am so Whig, I hate all spoils but the opima spolia. I think it, too, much more creditable to control ministers, than to be ministers—and much more creditable than to become mere ministers ourselves. I have several other excellent reasons against our success, though I could combat them with as many drawn from the insufficiency of the present folk, and from the propriety of Mr. Pitt being minister; but I am too tired, and very likely so are you, my dear Lord, by this time, and therefore good night!

Friday, noon.

I had sealed my letter, and break it open again on receiving yours of the 13th, by the messenger. Though I am very sorry you had not then got mine from Monin, which would have prepared you for much of what has happened, I do not fear its miscarriage, as I think I can account for the delay. I had, for more security, put it into the parcel with two more volumes of my Anecdotes of Painting; which, I suppose, remained in Monin's baggage; and he might not have unpacked it when he delivered the single letters. If he has not yet sent you the parcel, you may ask for it, as the same delicacy is not necessary as for a letter.

I thank Lord Beauchamp much for the paper, but should thank him much more for a letter from himself. I am going this minute to the House, where I have already been to prayers, to take a place. It was very near full then, so critical a day it is! I expect we shall be beaten—but we shall not be so many times more. Lord Granby, I hear, is to move the previous question—they are reduced to their heavy cannon.

Sunday evening, 19th.

Happening to hear of a gentleman who sets out for Paris in two or three days, I stopped my letter, both out of prudence (pray admire me!) and from thinking that it was as well to send you at once the complete history of our Great Week. By the time you have read the preceding pages, you may, perhaps, expect to find a change in the ministry in what I am going to say. You must have a little patience; our parliamentary war, like the last war in Germany, produces very considerable battles that are not decisive. Marshal Pitt has given another great blow to the subsidiary army, but they remained masters of the field, and both sides sing Te Deum. I am not talking figuratively, when I assure you that bells, bonfires, and an illumination from the Monument, were prepared in the City, in case we had had the majority. Lord Temple was so indiscreet and indecent as to have faggots ready for two bonfires, but was persuaded to lay aside the design, even before it was abortive.

It is impossible to give you the detail of so long a debate as Friday's. You will regret it the less when I tell you it was a very dull one. I never knew a day of expectation answer. The impromptus and the unexpected are ever the most shining. We love to hear ourselves talk, and yet we must be formed of adamant to be able to talk day and night on the same question for a week together. If you had seen how ill we looked, you would not have wondered we did not speak well. A company of colliers emerging from damp and darkness could not have appeared more ghastly and dirty than we did on Wednesday morning; and we had not recovered much bloom on Friday. We spent two or three hours on corrections of, and additions to, the question of pronouncing the warrant illegal, till the ministry had contracted it to fit scarce anything but the individual case of Wilkes, Pitt not opposing the amendments because Charles Yorke gave into them; for it is wonderful what deference is paid by both sides to that house. The debate then began by Norton's moving to adjourn the consideration of the question for four months, and holding out a promise of a bill, which neither they mean, nor, for my part, should I like: I would not give prerogative so much as a definition. You are a peer, and therefore, perhaps, will hear it with patience—but think how our ears must have tingled, when he told us, that should we pass the resolution, and he were a judge, he would mind it no more than the resolution of a drunken porter!—Had old Onslow been in the chair, I believe he would have knocked him down with the mace. He did hear of it during the debate, though not severely enough; but the town rings with it. Charles Yorke replied, and was much admired. Me he did not please; I require a little more than palliatives and sophistries. He excused the part he has taken by pleading that he had never seen the warrant till after Wilkes was taken up—yet he then pronounced the 'No. 45' a libel, and advised the commitment of Wilkes to the Tower. If you advised me to knock a man down, would you excuse yourself by saying you had never seen the stick with which I gave the blow? Other speeches we had without end, but none good, except from Lord George Sackville, a short one from Elliot, and one from Charles Townshend, so fine that it amazed, even from him. Your brother had spoken with excellent sense against the corrections, and began well again in the debate, but with so much rapidity that he confounded himself first, and then was seized with such a hoarseness that he could not proceed. Pitt and George Grenville ran a match of silence, striving which should reply to the other. At last, Pitt, who had three times in the debate retired with pain, rose about three in the morning, but so languid, so exhausted, that, in his life, he never made less figure. Grenville answered him; and at five in the morning we divided. The Noes were so loud, as it admits a deeper sound than Ays, that the Speaker, who has got a bit of nose since the opposition got numbers, gave it for us. They went forth; and when I heard our side counted to the amount of 218, I did conclude we were victorious; but they returned 232. It is true we were beaten by fourteen, but we were increased by twenty-one; and no ministry could stand on so slight an advantage, if we could continue above two hundred.

We may, and probably shall, fall off: this was our strongest question—but our troops will stand fast; their hopes and views depend upon it, and their spirits are raised. But for the other side it will not be the same. The lookers-out will be strayers away, and their very subsidies will undo them. They bought two single votes that day with two peerages; Sir R. Bampfylde<sup>13</sup> and Sir Charles Tynte<sup>14</sup>—and so are going to light up the flame of two more county elections—and that in the west, where surely nothing was wanting but a tinder-box!

You would have almost laughed to see the spectres produced by both sides; one would have thought that they had sent a search-warrant for Members of Parliament into every hospital. Votes were brought down in flannels and blankets, till the floor of the House looked like the pool of Bethesda. 'Tis wonderful that half of us are not dead—I should not say us; herculean I have not suffered the least, except that from being a Hercules of ten grains, I don't believe I now weigh above eight. I felt from nothing so much as the noise, which made me as drunk as an owl—you may imagine the clamours of two parties so nearly matched, and so impatient to come to a decision.

<sup>13</sup> Sir Richard Warwick Bampfylde, fourth Baronet, of Poltimore, Devonshire; M.P. for Devonshire.

<sup>14</sup> Sir Charles Kemeys Tynte, fifth Baronet, of Halsewell; M.P. for Somersetshire.

The Duchess of Richmond has got a fever with the attendance of Tuesday—but on Friday we were forced to be unpolite. The Amazons came down in such squadrons, that we were forced to be denied. However, eight or nine of the Patriotesses dined in one of the Speaker's rooms, and stayed there till twelve—nay, worse, while their dear country was at stake, I am afraid they were playing at loo!

The Townshends, you perceive by this account, are returned; their father not dead. Lord Howe and the Colonel<sup>15</sup> voted with us; so did Lord Newnham<sup>16</sup>, and is likely to be turned out of doors for it. A warrant to take up Lord Charles Spencer was sent to Blenheim from Bedford House, and signed by his brother, and returned for him; so he went thither—not a very kind office in the Duke of Marlborough to Lord Charles's character. Lord Granby refused to make the motion, but spoke for it.

Lord Hardwicke is relapsed; but we do not now fear any consequences from his death. The Yorkes, who abandoned a triumphant administration, are not so tender as to return and comfort them in their depression.

<sup>15</sup> Colonel Hon. William (afterwards fifth Viscount) Howe (d. 1814); Commander-in-Chief in North America, 1776–8.

<sup>16</sup> George Simon Harcourt (1736–1809), Viscount Nuneham, eldest son of first Earl Harcourt, whom he succeeded in 1777. Lord Nuneham's refined and artistic tastes and his political views gained him Horace Walpole's friendship. The two frequently corresponded between 1763 and 1785, when Earl Harcourt (as he then was) incurred Horace Walpole's disapproval by opposition to Fox's India Bill, while his subsequent reconciliation to the court excited Walpole's contempt and ridicule.

The chief business now, I suppose, will lie in souterrains and intrigues. Lord Bute's panic will, probably, direct him to make application to us. Sandwich will be manufacturing lies, and Rigby negotiations. Some change or other, whether partial or extensive, must arrive. The best that can happen for the ministers, is to be able to ward off the blow till the recess, and they have time to treat at leisure; but in just the present state it is impossible things should remain. The opposition is too strong, and their leaders too able to make no impression.

Adieu! pray tell Mr. Hume that I am ashamed to be thus writing the history of England, when he is with you!

P.S. The new baronies are contradicted, but may recover truth at the end of the session.

935. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Feb. 20, 1764.

THE seeds of opposition were sown a long time before they produced any fruit, but a violent crop has shot up this week. I don't know, my dear Sir, whether you are not too much a foreigner to comprehend what I am going to tell you. Does not it sound strange to your Tuscan ears that a Member of Parliament, after being expelled the House and fled from his country, should have his complaint tried against the whole Secretary's office for breach of his privilege? Learn to adore Liberty, when it defends the rights of a man after he has forfeited them!—and don't despise the constitutions of your countrymen, who have endured such fatigue for a week as will give your Italian nerves the headache but to hear of.

On Monday we sat till past midnight hearing evidence on the seizure of Wilkes's papers. The next day we proceeded, closed the evidence at one in the morning, and then went—not to bed—but into a debate. The opposition moved to vote the seizure of papers by warrants, not specifying names, to be illegal. The ministers insisted that we should first clear the accused, as having acted according to the forms of office. A quarter after four we divided, when, to the utter confusion of the court, they proved but 207; we 197. Here your Florentine arithmetic may again be at fault, and not tell you that a majority of but ten is a defeat; for you must reckon into the minority, popularity, the hopes of the interested, and their fears, and twenty circumstances that contribute to drown a sinking administration. To give them their due, they dispute the ground inch by inch. We again fell to debating, divided again, 208 and 184; and, in short, sat till a quarter after seven in the morning. On Friday we went on the great question itself, which held us from three o'clock in the afternoon till half an hour after five the next morning. We are again beaten; but how beaten? by 232 against 218; a minority increasing as it is defeated.

Do not you wonder that I am alive? that I am writing to you? Was ever such a week? never. Was there ever so late a day as Tuesday? never. Go and look over the Fasti in your Capitol, you will find nothing like this. If we have out-conquered the Romans, we have out-talked them too—I mean in length of time; I cannot say our eloquence has been equal to our perseverance. There was some spirit towards morning on Tuesday; very little indeed on Friday that was not absolute dullness; yet Mr. Pitt commanded, but so oppressed with gout, and so exhausted, that, though he spoke above an hour, at four in the morning it was as languid as if he had been paid for it. In truth, his enemies were not formidable. We had the five best speakers in the House,—him, Charles Townshend, Mr. Conway, Charles Yorke, and Lord George Sackville, who has deserted from the court.

The world you may conclude waits in anxious suspense for the subsequent operations of the campaign. The ministers must try if by weight of metal they can maintain their ground. For my part, I am satisfied. I did not believe that there were 197 men who had spirit and virtue enough to resist all temptations, when their liberties were at stake. Since there are so many, it is enough to ward off any danger from such bunglers as the present ministers, the badness of whose characters, assisted by no better parts, is an antidote to their own poison. Their best champion has parts and shrewdness, but is so impudently profligate that even absolute power in the crown, which he is so ready to promote, could not protect him long. This hero of brass is the Attorney-General Norton, who is qualified to draw up impious manifestoes for a Czarina!

There is nothing in the shape of news but these politics; but they are full employment for the town; and one that will not speedily be concluded. Should even a change of administration happen, I do not see that tranquillity would be restored. Lord Bute has set such humours on float as may take half a century to reduce into a quiet channel. Even a delay of change may cost some men very dear. The longer the torrent of a nation is opposed, with the more fury it is apt to carry away the dykes.

The foreigners, of whom there are numbers here, for we have not yet lost our fashionableness in Europe, attend our debates assiduously, though even the language is a secret to them! What, then, must a question of law be? But they think themselves rewarded by seeing Mr. Pitt speak at five in the morning.

I was diverted with your account of the Princess of Modena's<sup>1</sup> transit through Florence, and of the regales they gave her. I am impatient for the Duke of York's arrival there; but do you know that the speculations of one of your politicians on that journey was not so wide of the mark as you think<sup>2</sup>? Mi capisce? I do not mean the simpleton who thought the flames raised by the North Briton would reach St. James's.

I do not pretend to guess what will happen, for I have laid an embargo on my own prophesying. If any change arrives, this letter will, at least, have prepared you for it. Adieu!

936. TO MISS ANNE PITT.

February 21, 1764.

THE gravest and best-informed persons say, that those divine ladies the fairies are under the necessity of appearing one day in a week in a mortal shape, during which time they are liable to all the accidents that afflict sublunary beings. I am sure yesterday was not your mortal day, and I hope to-day is not. I hope your humanity does not suffer for a double exertion of your fairyhood. I have read many fairy-tales, but I never lived one till last night<sup>1</sup>—

so thick the aery crowd
Swarm'd and were straiten'd, till the signal giv'n:
Behold a wonder! they but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless, like that Pygmæan race
Beyond the Indian mount, or fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,

LETTER 935.—<sup>1</sup> Maria Theresa of Massa Carrara, wife of Hercules Rinaldo, Hereditary Prince (afterwards Duke) of Modena.

<sup>2</sup> The Duke was thought to incline to opposition.

LETTER 936.—Not in C.; now printed from 11th MSS. Comm., 18th Report, Appendix, Pt. III, vol. i. p. 145.

<sup>1</sup> Miss Pitt had given a ball. See letter to Earl of Hertford of Feb. 24, 1764.

Or dreams he sees ; while overhead the moon
 Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth
 Wheels her pale course ; they on their mirth and dance Intent, with jocund music charm his ear.
 At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds<sup>2</sup>.

Forgive me this long quotation, but you see, Madam, every word was too applicable to be omitted, especially the last line, for Milton alone could describe how charmed the heart was of yours ever.

937. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

I am impatient for your manuscript, but have not yet received it. You may depend on my keeping it to myself, and returning it safely.

I do not know that history of my father<sup>1</sup>, which you mention by the name of Musgrave. If it is the Critical History of his Administration, I have it ; if not, I shall be obliged to you for it.

Your kindness to your tenants is like yourself and most humane. I am glad your prize rewards you, and wish your fortune had been as good as mine, who with a single ticket in this last lottery got five hundred pounds.

I have nothing new, that is, nothing old, to tell you. You care not about the present world, and are the only real philosopher I know.

I this winter met with a very large lot of English heads, chiefly of the reign of James I, which very nearly perfects my collection. There were several which I had in vain

<sup>2</sup> Paradise Lost, i. 775-88.

LETTER 937.—Wrongly placed by C. ; endorsed by Cole 'Received Feb. 24, St. Matthias, 1764.'

<sup>1</sup> A brief and true History of Sir

Robert Walpole and his Family from their Original to the present Time (London, 1788), by William Musgrave.

hunted for these ten years. I have bought, too, some very scarce, but more modern ones out of Sir Charles Cottrell's collection. Except a few of Faithorne, there are scarce any now that I much wish for.

With my Anecdotes I packed up for you the head of Archbishop Hutton, and a new little print of Strawberry. If the volumes, as I understand by your letter, stay in town to be bound, I hope your bookseller will take care not to lose those trifles.

I am, dear Sir,
Your ever obliged,
Humble servant,
HOR. WALPOLE.

938. TO SIR DAVID DALRYMPLE.

DEAR SIR,

Arlington Street, Feb. 23, 1764.

I am much in your debt, but have had but too much excuse for being so. Men who go to bed at six and seven in the morning, and who rise but to return to the same fatigue, have little leisure for other most necessary duties. The severe attendance we have had lately in the House of Commons cannot be unknown to you, and will already, I trust, have pleaded my pardon.

Mr. Bathoe has got the two volumes for you, and will send them by the conveyance you prescribe. You will find in them much, I fear, that will want your indulgence; and not only dryness, trifles, and, I conclude, many mistakes, but perhaps opinions different from your own. I can only plead my natural and constant frankness, which always speaks indifferently, as it thinks, on all sides and subjects. I am bigoted to none; Charles or Cromwell, Whigs or Tories, are all alike to me, but in what I think they deserve, applause or censure; and therefore, if I sometimes commend, sometimes blame them, it is not from being inconsistent, but from considering them in the single light in which I then speak of them; at the same time meaning to give only my private opinion, and not at all expecting to have it adopted by any other man. Thus much, perhaps, it was necessary for me to say, and I will trouble you no farther about myself.

Single portraits by Vandyck I shall avoid particularizing any farther, and also separate pieces by other masters, for a reason I may trust you with. Many persons possess pictures which they believe or call originals, without their being so, and have wished to have them inserted in my lists. This I certainly do not care to do, nor, on the other hand, to assume the impertinence of deciding from my own judgement. I shall, therefore, stop where I have stopped. The portrait which you mention, of the Earl of Warwick, Sir, is very famous and indubitable; but I believe you will assent to my prudence, which does not trouble me too often. I have heard as much fame of the Earl of Denbigh<sup>1</sup>.

You will see in my next edition, that I have been so lucky as to find and purchase both the drawings that were at Buckingham House, of the Triumphs of Riches and Poverty<sup>2</sup>. They have raised even my idea of Holbein. Could I afford it, and we had engravers equal to the task, the public should be acquainted with their merit; but I am disgusted with paying great sums for wretched performances. I am ashamed of the prints in my books, which were extravagantly paid for, and are wretchedly executed.

Your zeal for reviving the publication of Illustrious Heads accords, Sir, extremely with my own sentiments; but I own

LETTER 988.—<sup>1</sup> William Fielding (d. 1643), first Earl of Denbigh.

<sup>2</sup> Drawings by Zuccherò after Holbein. 'These drawings, invaluable by the originals being lost, were purchased from Buckingham House, when Sir Charles Sheffield sold it to the King.' (Description of Strawberry Hill.)

I despair of that, and every other public work. Our artists get so much money by hasty, slovenly performances, that they will undertake nothing that requires labour and time. I have never been able to persuade any one of them to engrave the Beauties at Windsor<sup>3</sup>, which are daily perishing for want of fires in that palace. Most of them entered into a plan I had undertaken, of an edition of Grammont, with portraits. I had three executed; but after the first, which was well done, the others were so wretchedly performed, though even the best was much too dear, that I was forced to drop the design. Walker<sup>4</sup>, who has done much the best heads in my new volumes, told me, when I pressed him to consider his reputation, that 'he had got fame enough!' What hopes, Sir, can one entertain after so shameful an answer? I have had numerous schemes, but never could bring any to bear, but what depended solely on myself; and how little is it that a private man, with a moderate fortune, and who has many other avocations, can accomplish alone? I flattered myself that this reign would have given new life and views to the artists and the curious. I am disappointed; politics on one hand, and want of taste in those about his Majesty on the other, have prevented my expectations from being answered.

The letters you tell me of, Sir, are indeed curious, both those of Atterbury and the rest; but I cannot flatter myself that I shall be able to contribute to publication. My press, from the narrowness of its extent, and having but one man and a boy, goes very slow; nor have I room or fortune to carry it farther. What I have already in hand, or promised, will take me up a long time. The London booksellers play me all manner of tricks. If I do not allow them ridiculous profit, they will do nothing to promote the sale; and when I do, they buy up the impression, and sell it at an advanced price before my face. This is the case of my two first volumes of Anecdotes, for which people have been made to pay half a guinea, and a guinea, more than the advertised price. In truth, the plague I have had in every shape with my own printers, engravers, the booksellers, &c., besides my own trouble, have almost discouraged me from what I took up at first as an amusement, but which has produced very little of it.

<sup>3</sup> By Lely.

<sup>4</sup> Antony Walker (1726-1765).

I am sorry, upon the whole, Sir, to be forced to confess to you, that I have met with so many discouragements in virtue and literature. If an independent gentleman, though a private one, finds such obstacles, what must an ingenious man do, who is obliged to couple views of profit with zeal for the public? Or, do our artists and booksellers cheat me the more because I am a gentleman? Whatever is the cause, I am almost as sick of the profession of editor, as of author. If I touch upon either more, it will be more idly, though chiefly because I never can be quite idle.

939. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Feb. 24, 1764.

As I had an opportunity, on Tuesday last, of sending you a letter of eleven pages, by a very safe conveyance, I shall say but few words to-day; indeed, I have left nothing to say, but to thank you for the answer I received from you this morning to mine by Monsieur Monin. I am very happy that you take so kindly the freedom I used: the circumstances made me think it necessary; and I flatter myself, that you are persuaded I was not to blame in speaking so openly, when two persons so dear to me<sup>1</sup> were concerned. Your indulgence will not lead me to abuse it. What you say on the caution I mentioned, convinces me that I was right, by finding your judgement correspond with my own—but enough of that.

LETTER 939.—<sup>1</sup> The Earl of Hertford and General Conway.

My long letter, which, perhaps, you will not receive till after this (you will receive it from a lady), will give you a full detail of the last extraordinary week. Since that, there has been an accidental suspension of arms. Not only Mr. Pitt is laid up with the gout, but the Speaker has it too. We have been adjourned till to-day, and, as he is not recovered, have again adjourned till next Wednesday. The events of the week have been, a complaint made by Lord Lyttelton in your House, of a book called Droit le Roy<sup>2</sup>; a tract written in the highest strain of prerogative, and drawn from all the old obsolete law-books on that question. The ministers met this complaint with much affected indignation, and even on the complaint being communicated to us, took it up themselves; and both Houses have ordered the book to be burned by the hangman. To comfort themselves for this forced zeal for liberty, the North Briton and the Essay on Woman have both been condemned<sup>3</sup> by juries in the King's Bench; but that triumph has been more than balanced again, by the City giving their freedom to Lord Chief-Justice Pratt, ordering his picture to be placed in the King's Bench, thanking their members for their behaviour in Parliament on the warrant, and giving orders for instructions to be drawn for their future conduct.

Lord Granby is made Lord Lieutenant of Derbyshire; but the vigour of this affront was wofully weakened by excuses to the Duke of Devonshire, and by its being known that the measure was determined two months ago.

All this sounds very hostile; yet, don't be surprised if you hear of some sudden treaty. Don't you know a little busy

<sup>2</sup> By Timothy Brecknock, hanged in 1786.

<sup>3</sup> On Feb. 21 Wilkes was found guilty of being the author of the North Briton and the Essay on Woman.

squadron that had the chief hand in the negotiation last autumn? Well, I have reason to think that Phraates<sup>4</sup> is negotiating with Leonidas<sup>5</sup> by the same intervention. All the world sees that the present ministers are between two fires. Would it be extraordinary if the artillery of both should be discharged on them at once? But this is not proper for the post: I grow prudent the less prudence is necessary.

We are in pain for the Duchess of Richmond, who, instead of the jaundice, has relapsed into a fever. She was blooded twice last night, and yet had a very bad night. I called at the door at three o'clock, when they thought the fever rather diminished, but spoke of her as very ill. I have not seen your brother or Lady Aylesbury to-day, but found they had been very much alarmed yesterday evening. Lord Suffolk, they say, is going to be married to Miss Trevor Hampden.

Your brother has told me, that among Lady Hertford's things seized at Dover, was a packet for me from you. Mr. Bowman has undertaken to make strict inquiry for it. Adieu, my dear Lord.

P.S. We had, last Monday, the prettiest ball that ever was seen, at Mrs. Anne Pitt's, in the compass of a silver penny. There were one hundred and four persons, of which number fifty-five supped. The supper-room was disposed with tables and benches back to back, in the manner of an ale-house. The idea sounds ill; but the fairies had so improved upon it, had so be-garlanded, so sweetmeated, and so desserted it, that it looked like a vision. I told her she could only have fed and stowed so much company by a miracle, and that, when we were gone, she would take up twelve baskets-full of people. The Duchess of Bedford asked me before Madame de Guerchy, if I would not give them a ball at Strawberry? Not for the universe! What! turn a ball, and dust, and dirt, and a million of candles, into my charming new gallery! I said, I could not flatter myself that people would give themselves the trouble of going eleven miles for a ball—(though I believe they would go fifty)—‘Well, then,’ says she, ‘it shall be a dinner.’—‘With all my heart, I have no objection; but no ball shall set its foot within my doors.’

<sup>4</sup> The Earl of Bute.

<sup>5</sup> Mr. Pitt.

940. TO GROSVENOR BEDFORD.

DEAR SIR,

Feb. 29, 1764.

I will get you to send one of the porters of the Exchequer, in whom you have most confidence, with the enclosed three guineas. Two are for the prisoners that are sick in the new jail, Southwark; the other for those in the common side of the Marshalsea prison. He must not say from whom he comes, but in the name of A. B., and don't let him go into the prison, for the jail distemper is there.

I want some gilt paper and a penknife.

Yours ever,

H. W.

941. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Arlington Street, March 3, 1764.

Just as I was going to the Opera, I received your MS. I would not defer telling you so, that you may know it is safe. But I have additional reason to write to you immediately, for, on opening the book, the first thing I saw was a new obligation to you, the charming Faithorne of Sir Orlando Bridgman<sup>1</sup>, which according to your constantly obliging manner you have sent me, and I almost fear you think I begged it; but I can disculpate myself, for I had discovered that it belongs to Dugdale's Origines Judiciales, and had ordered my bookseller to try to get me that book, which when I accomplish, you shall command your own print again; for it is too fine an impression to rob you of.

LETTER 941.—<sup>1</sup> Sir Orlando Bridgeman, first Baronet, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, 1667-72; d. 1674.

I have been so entertained with your book, that I have stayed at home on purpose, and gone through three parts of it. It makes me wish earnestly some time or other to go through all your collections, for I have already found twenty things of great moment to me. One is particularly satisfactory to me; it is in Mr. Baker's<sup>2</sup> MSS. at Cambridge; the title of Eglesham's<sup>3</sup> book against the Duke of Bucks, mentioned by me in the account of Gerbier, from Vertue, who fished out everything, and always proves in the right. This piece I must get transcribed by Mr. Gray's assistance. I fear I shall detain your MS. prisoner a little, for the notices I have found, but I will take infinite care of it, as it deserves.

I have got among my new old prints a most curious one of one Toole. It seems to be a burlesque. He lived in temp. Jac. I, and appears to have been an adventurer, like Sir Ant. Shirley: can you tell me anything of him?

I must repeat how infinitely I think myself obliged to you both for the print and the use of your MS., which is of the greatest use and entertainment to me—but you frighten me about Mr. Baker's MSS. from the neglect of them. I should lose all patience if yours were to be treated so. Bind them in iron, and leave them in a chest of cedar.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Baker (1656–1740), non-juror and antiquary. His Life was written by Horace Walpole at Cole's request. (See Works of Lord Orford, vol. ii. p. 339.)

<sup>3</sup> George Eglesham, a physician, author of Prodromus Vindictae, a pamphlet published in 1626, in which he accused the Duke of Buckingham of having caused the deaths of James I and of the Marquis of Hamilton. It was afterwards translated into English as The Forerunner of Revenge.

They are, I am sure, most valuable, from what I have found already. Adieu! dear Sir.

Your very much obliged,

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

942. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

MY DEAR LORD, Strawberry Hill, Sunday, March 11, 1764.

The last was so busy a week with me, that I had not a minute's time to tell you of Lord Hardwicke's death. I had so many auctions, dinners, loo-parties, so many sick acquaintance, with the addition of a long day in the House of Commons (which, by the way, I quitted for a sale of books), and a ball, that I left the common newspapers to inform you of an event, which two months ago would have been of much consequence. The Yorkes are fixed, and the contest at Cambridge<sup>1</sup> will but make them strike deeper root in opposition. I have not heard how their father has portioned out his immense treasures. The election at Cambridge is to be on Tuesday, 24th; Charles Townshend is gone thither, and I suppose, by this time, has ranted, and romanced, and turned every one of their ideas topsy-turvy.

Our long day was Friday, the opening of the budget. Mr. Grenville spoke for two hours and forty minutes; much of it well, but too long, too many repetitions, and too evident marks of being galled by reports, which he answered with more art than sincerity. There were a few more speeches, till nine o'clock, but no division. Our armistice, you see, continues. Lord Bute is, I believe, negotiating with both sides; I know he is with the opposition, and has a prospect of making very good terms for himself, for Patriots seldom have the gift of perseverance. It is wonderful how soon their virtue thaws!

LETTER 942.—<sup>1</sup> For the office of High Steward. The candidates were the Earls of Hardwicke and Sandwich. The former was ultimately elected.

Last Thursday, the Duchess of Queensberry gave a ball, opened it herself with a minuet, and danced two country dances: as she had enjoined everybody to be with her by six, to sup at twelve, and go away directly. Of the Campbell-sisters, all were left out but Lady Strafford. Lady Rockingham and Lady Sondes, who, having had colds, deferred sending answers, received notice that their places were filled up, and that they must not come; but were pardoned on submission. A card was sent to invite Lord and Lady Cardigan, and Lord Beaulieu instead of Lord Montagu<sup>2</sup>. This, her Grace protested, was by accident. Lady Cardigan was very angry, and yet went. Except these flights, the only extraordinary thing the Duchess did, was to do nothing extraordinary, for I do not call it very mad that some pique happening between her and the Duchess of Bedford, the latter had this distich sent to her,

Come with a whistle, and come with a call,
Come with a good will, or come not at all.

I do not know whether what I am going to tell you did not border a little upon Moorfields. The gallery where they danced was very cold. Lord Lorn, George Selwyn, and I, retired into a little room, and sat comfortably by the fire. The Duchess looked in, said nothing, and sent a smith to take the hinges of the door off. We understood the hint, and left the room, and so did the smith the door. This was pretty legible.

My niece Waldegrave talks of accompanying me to Paris, but ten or twelve weeks may make great alteration in a sister, with whom she was on bad terms.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Montagu was Lord Cardigan's eldest son; Lord Beaulieu was the husband of Lady Cardigan's

handsome young widow's plan: I even think I see some who will—not forbid banns, but propose them. Indeed, I am almost afraid of coming to you myself. The air of Paris works such miracles, that it is not safe to trust oneself there. I hear of nothing but my Lady Hertford's rakery, and Mr. Wilkes's religious deportment and constant attendance at your chapel. Lady Anne<sup>3</sup>, I conclude, chatters as fast as my Lady Essex<sup>4</sup> and her four daughters.

Princess Amelia told me t'other night, and bade me tell you, that she had seen Lady Massarene<sup>5</sup> at Bath, who is warm in praise of you, and said that you had spent two thousand pounds out of friendship, to support her son<sup>6</sup> in an election. She told the Princess too, that she had found a rent-roll of your estate in a farm-house, and that it is fourteen thousand a year. This I was ordered, I know not why, to tell you. The Duchess of Bedford has not been asked to the loo-parties at Cavendish House<sup>7</sup> this winter, and only once to whisk there, and that was one Friday, when she is at home herself. We have nothing at the Princess's but silver-loo, and her Bath and Tunbridge acquaintance. The trade at our gold-loo is as contraband as ever. I cannot help saying, that the Duchess of Bedford would mend our silver-loo, and that I wish everybody played like her at the gold.

Arlington Street, Tuesday.

You thank me, my dear Lord, for my gazettes (in your letter of the 8th) more than they deserve. There is no trouble in sending you news; as you excuse the careless

<sup>3</sup> Lady Anne Seymour-Conway (d. 1784), eldest daughter of first Earl of Hertford; m. (1766) Charles Moore, sixth Earl (afterwards Marquis) of Drogheda.

<sup>4</sup> Lady Elizabeth Russell, youngest daughter of second Duke of Bedford; m. (1726), as his second wife, William Capel, third Earl of Essex; d. 1784.

<sup>5</sup> Anne (d. 1805), daughter of Henry Eyre, of Rowtor, Derby; m. (1741), as his second wife, Clotworthy Skeffington, fifth Viscount (afterwards first Earl of) Massareene.

<sup>6</sup> Clotworthy Skeffington (1743–1805), second Earl of Massareene.

<sup>7</sup> Princess Amelia's house, at the corner of Harley Street.

manner in which I write anything I hear. Don't think yourself obliged to be punctual in answering me: it would be paying too dear for such idle and trifling dispatches. Your picture of the attention paid to Madame Pompadour's illness, and of the ridicule attached to the mission of that homage, is very striking. It would be still more so by comparison. Think if the Duke of Cumberland was to set up with my Lord Bute!

The East India Company, yesterday, elected Lord Clive—Great Mogul; that is, they have made him Governor-General of Bengal, and restored his jaghire. I dare to say he will put it out of their power ever to take it away again. We have had a deluge of disputes and pamphlets on the late events in that distant province of our empire, the Indies. The novelty of the manners divert me: our governors there, I think, have learned more of their treachery and injustice, than they have taught them of our discipline.

Monsieur Helvetius arrived yesterday. I will take care to inform the Princess, that you could not do otherwise than you did about her trees. My compliments to all your hôtel.

943. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, March 18, 1764.

As I mean, my dear Sir, that my letters should amuse or inform you, I ought not, at least in the first intention, to write them here, whither I generally come to tranquillize myself from folly and bustle, or to compose my mind under any misfortune; my situation at this moment. I have just lost my nephew, Lord Malpas<sup>1</sup>; a worthy amiable man, whom I have loved from his childhood. But my grief is light compared to that of poor Lady Malpas. He married her sixteen years ago, with no considerable portion of beauty, and less fortune, though of an exceedingly good family. As his father's profusion called for his restoring the estate, we lamented this match; but it proved a blessing: there never was a more prudent, estimable woman. They lived in the happiest union. Above two months ago he went to his regiment in Ireland, and came away ill. He arrived in town last Monday, grew immediately worse; it turned to an inflammation in his bowels, and carried him off in five days. There is but a slender provision for his widow, and less for his only daughter<sup>2</sup>. The son, who is near fifteen, is a fine boy, with such an amiable tenderness in his nature, that if I could trust to hopes and appearances, I should flatter myself, that he would alleviate his mother's misfortune, and restore his family. Lady Malpas has singular claim to such compensation; her mother, Lady Edwards, made a second match imprudently with a man who plundered and left her, and ever since Lady Malpas has maintained her, and at the same time, maintained her own duty and respect.

LETTER 943.—<sup>1</sup> George Cholmondeley, eldest son of George, third Earl of Cholmondeley, by Mary, daughter of Sir Robert Walpole.

Lord Malpas married Hester, only daughter of Sir Francis Edwards. Walpole.

This has been a fatal month. Lord Hardwicke<sup>3</sup>, Lord Townshend<sup>4</sup>, and Lord Macclesfield<sup>5</sup>, are all dead. The first immensely rich, and, I at least think, no loss. The second has given everything he could to a housemaid, by whom he had three children; but a great deal reverts to my Lady, who cannot enjoy that, or her widowhood, as she would have done a few years ago. She is paralytic; and it affects all that pleased one in her—her speech and spirits. Lord Macclesfield had married his mistress, or at least other

<sup>2</sup> She was afterwards married to Clapcote Lisle, Esq. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Philip Yorke, Earl of Hardwicke, had been Lord Chancellor. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> Charles, Viscount Townshend, son of the Secretary of State. Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> George Parker, second Earl of Macclesfield. Walpole.

people's—but she was a gentlewoman, and has behaved extremely well. His Tellership of the Exchequer comes by reversion to Mr. Grenville's son <sup>6</sup>.

Don't you wonder what has become of our politics? Did not you expect to hear that the opposition were pushing their almost triumphant arms into every quarter? No such thing; yet Hannibal<sup>7</sup> is not enervating himself at Capua. A gouty bed is his bed of roses. Mr. Yorke has been confined with his father, and by his death; and Lord Townshend's death has secluded Charles Townshend. This confinement of the generals might account to the world for the suspension of arms; but I believe is not the true cause. Both sides are treating with the abdicated favourite; and the balance he cannot hold, he can incline as he pleases. When the Parliament rises, I shall expect he will decide.

Lord Clive has been suddenly nominated, by the East India Company, to the empire of Bengal, where Dupleix<sup>8</sup> has taught all our merchants to affect to be King-making Earls of Warwick, and where the chief things they have made are blunders and confusion. It is amazing that our usurpations have not taught the Indians union, discipline, and courage. We are governing nations to which it takes a year to send our orders.

I am sorry for what you tell me in your letter of the 18th, that Lord B.<sup>9</sup> does not please in Russia; for his own particular I am very indifferent, but I have great regard for his aunt, Lady Suffolk, and know how much it will hurt her if she hears it. That he should be pert mal à propos, does not surprise me. He would never have been my choice for such an employment, which ought so little to be

<sup>6</sup> Eldest son of George Grenville, and afterwards Earl Temple. Walpole.—Cr. Marquis of Buckingham, 1784; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 1782-83 and 1787-89; d. 1813.

<sup>7</sup> Mr. William Pitt, afterwards

Lord Chatham. Walpole.

<sup>8</sup> Joseph (d. 1763), Marquis Dupleix, formerly Governor-General of the French East Indies.

<sup>9</sup> John Hobart, second Earl of Buckinghamshire. Walpole.

given by favour, and is so seldom given for any other reason—is so seldom given to a Sir Horace Mann. You know it is my opinion, that the reason of sending so many fools about Europe from all parts of Europe, is, that such are elected whose capacities resemble most the heads of those they are to represent. Adieu! It is time to finish when I attack the Corps Diplomatique and the Patronanza, though writing to a minister.

P.S. We expect every day to hear of the death of Madame Pompadour<sup>10</sup>.

944. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Sunday, March 18, 1764.

You will feel, my dear Lord, for the loss I have had, and for the much greater affliction of poor Lady Malpas. My nephew went to his regiment in Ireland before Christmas, and returned but last Monday. He had, I suppose, heated himself in that bacchanalian country, and was taken ill the very day he set out, yet he came on, but grew much worse the night of his arrival; it turned to an inflammation in his bowels, and he died last Friday. You may imagine the distress where there was so much domestic felicity, and where the deprivation is augmented by the very slender circumstances in which he could but leave his family; as his father—such an improvident father—is living! Lord Malpas himself was very amiable, and I had always loved him—but this is the cruel tax one pays for living, to see one's friends taken away before one! It has been a week of mortality. The night I wrote to you last, and had sent away my letter, came an account of my Lord Townshend's death. He had been ill-treated by a surgeon in the country, then was carried improperly to the Bath, and again back to Rainham; though Hawkins, and other surgeons and physicians, represented his danger to him. But the woman he kept, probably to prevent his seeing his family, persisted in these extravagant journeys, and he died in exquisite torment the day after his arrival in Norfolk. He mentions none of his children in his will, but the present Lord; to whom he gives 300*l.* a year that he had bought, adjoining to his estate. But there is said, or supposed to be, 50,000*l.* in the funds in his mistress's name, who was his housemaid. I do not aver this, for truth is not the staple commodity of that family. Charles is much disappointed and discontented—not so my Lady, who has to 2,000*l.* a year already, another 1,000*l.* in jointure, and 1,500*l.* her own estate<sup>1</sup> in Hertfordshire. We conclude, that the Duke of Argyle will abandon Mrs. Villiers for this richer widow; who will only be inconsolable, as she is too cunning, I believe, to let anybody console her. Lord Macclesfield is dead too; a great wind-fall for Mr. Grenville, who gets a Teller's place for his son.

<sup>10</sup> She died on April 15, 1764.

There is no public news: there was a longish day on Friday in our House, on a demand for money for the new bridge<sup>2</sup> from the City. It was refused, and into the accoupt of contempt, Dr. Hay threw a good deal of abuse on the Common Council—a nest of hornets, that I do not see the prudence of attacking.

I leave to your brother to tell you the particulars of an impertinent paragraph in the papers on you and your embassy<sup>3</sup>; but I must tell you how instantly, warmly, and

LETTER 944.—<sup>1</sup> Balls Park, Hertfordshire.

<sup>2</sup> Blackfriars Bridge.

<sup>3</sup> 'The printers of the London Evening Post and Gazetteer were called before the House of Lords, on a complaint made by the Earl of Marchmont, for printing a letter (written by Wilkes) reflecting on the Earl of Hertford, ambassador at Paris, for employing David Hume, the historian, as his secretary, and representing the embassy as totally of Scotch complexion.' (Memoirs of George III., ed. 1894, vol. i. p. 811.)

zealously, he resented it. He went directly to the Duke of Somerset<sup>4</sup>, to beg him to complain of it to the Lords. His Grace's bashfulness made him choose rather to second the complaint, but he desired Lord Marchmont to make it, who liked the office, and the printers are to attend your House to-morrow.

I went a little too fast in my history of Lord Clive, and yet I had it from Mr. Grenville himself. The jaghire is to be decided by law, that is, in the year 1900. Nor is it certain that his Omarship goes; that will depend on his obtaining a board of directors to his mind, at the approaching election. I forgot, too, to answer your question about Luther; and now I remember it, I cannot answer it. Some said his wife had been gallant. Some, that he had been too gallant, and that she suffered for it. Others laid it to his expenses at his election; others again, to political squabbles on that subject between him and his wife—but in short, as he sprung into the world by his election, so he withered when it was over, and has not been thought on since.

George Selwyn has had a frightful accident, that ended in a great escape. He was at dinner at Lord Coventry's, and just as he was drinking a glass of wine, he was seized with a fit of coughing, the liquor went wrong, and suffocated him: he got up for some water at the side-board, but being strangled, and losing his senses, he fell against the corner of the marble table with such violence, that they thought he had killed himself by a fracture of his skull. He lay senseless for some time, and was recovered with difficulty. He was immediately blooded, and had the chief wound, which is just over the eye, sewed up—but you never saw so battered a figure. All round his eye is as black as jet, and besides the scar on his forehead, he has cut his nose at top and bottom. He is well off with his life, and we with his wit.

<sup>4</sup> Edward Seymour (1718-1792), ninth Duke of Somerset.

P.S. Lord Macclesfield has left his wife threescore thousand pounds.

945. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Tuesday night, March 27, 1764.

YOUR brother has just told me, my dear Lord, at the Opera, that Colonel Keith<sup>1</sup>, a friend of his, sets out for Paris on Thursday. I take that opportunity of saying a few things to you, which would be less public than by the common post; and if I have not time to write to Lord Beauchamp too, I will defer my answer to him till Friday, as the post office will be more welcome to read that.

Lord Bute is come to town, has been long with the King alone, and goes publicly to court and the House of Lords, where the Barony of Bottetourt<sup>2</sup> has engrossed them some days, and of which the town thinks much, and I not at all, so I can tell you nothing about it. The first two days, I hear, Lord Bute was little noticed; but to-day much court was paid to him, even by the Duke of Bedford. Why this difference, I don't know: that matters are somehow adjusted between the favourite not minister, and the ministers not favourites, I have no doubt. Pitt certainly has been treating with him, and so threw away the great and unexpected progress which the opposition had made. They, good people, are either not angry with him for this, or have not found it out. The Sandwiches and Rigbys, who feel another half-year coming into their pockets, are not so blind. For my own part, I rejoice that the opposition are only fools, and by thus missing their treaty, will not appear knaves. In the meantime, I have no doubt but the return of Lord Bute must produce confusion at court. He and Grenville are both too fond of being ministers, not to be jealous of one another. If what is said to be designed proves true, that the King will go to Hanover, and take the Queen with him, I shall expect that clamour (which you see depends on very few men, for it has subsided during these private negotiations) will rise higher than ever. The Queen's absence must be designed to leave the regency in the hands of another lady<sup>3</sup>; connect that with Lord Bute's return, and judge what will be the consequence! These are the present politics, at least mine, who trouble myself little about them, and know less. I have not been at the House this month; the great points which interested me are over, and the very stand has shut the door. I might like some folks out, but there are so few that I desire to see in, that indifference is my present most predominating principle. The busier world are attentive to the election at Cambridge, which comes on next Friday; and I think, now, Lord Sandwich's friends have little hopes. Had I a vote, it would not be given for the new Lord Hardwicke.

LETTER 945.—<sup>1</sup> Afterwards Sir Robert Murray Keith, K.B.

<sup>2</sup> Revived in April 1764 in favour of Norborne Berkeley.

But we have a more extraordinary affair to engage us, and of which you particularly will hear much more,—indeed, I fear must be involved in. D'Éon has published (but to be sure you have already heard so) a most scandalous quarto<sup>4</sup>, abusing Monsieur de Guerchy outrageously, and most offensive to Messieurs de Praslin<sup>5</sup> and Nivernois. In truth, I think he will have made all three irreconcilable enemies. The Duc de Praslin must be enraged as to the Duke's carelessness and partiality to D'Eon, and will certainly grow to hate Guerchy, concluding the latter can never forgive him. D'Éon, even by his own account, is as culpable

<sup>3</sup> The Princess Dowager of Wales.

<sup>4</sup> Lettres, Mémoires et Négociations particulières du Chevalier d'Eon, &c., containing the 'history of his employments, troubles, quarrel with Monsieur de Guerchy, and his own wonderfully imprudent and insolent

letters to the Duc de Praslin, the second Minister in power at the Court at Versailles.' (Memoirs of George III, ed. 1894, vol. i. p. 312.)

<sup>5</sup> César Gabriel (1712-1785), Duc de Praslin, Minister for Foreign Affairs.

as possible, mad with pride, insolent, abusive, ungrateful, and dishonest, in short, a complication of abominations, yet originally ill-used by his court, afterwards too well; above all, he has great malice, and great parts to put that malice in play. Though there are even many bad puns in his book, a very uncommon fault in a French book, yet there is much wit too. Monsieur de Guerchy is extremely hurt, though with the least reason of the three; for his character for bravery and good-nature is so established, that here, at least, he will not suffer. I could write pages to you upon this subject, for I am full of it—but I will send you the book. The council have met to-day to consider what to do upon it<sup>6</sup>. Most people think it difficult for them to do anything. Lord Mansfield thinks they can—but I fear he has a little alacrity on the severe side in such cases. Yet I should be glad the law would allow severity in the present case. I should be glad of it, as I was in your case last week; and considering the present constitution of things, would put the severity of the law in execution. You will wonder at this sentence out of my mouth, but not when you have heard my reason. The liberty of the press has been so much abused, that almost all men, especially such as have weight, I mean, grave hypocrites and men of arbitrary principles, are ready to demand a restraint. I would therefore show, that the law, as it already stands, is efficacious enough to repress enormities. I hope so, particularly in Monsieur de Guerchy's case, or I do not see how a foreign minister can come hither; if, while their persons are called sacred, their characters are at the mercy of every servant that can pick a lock and pay for printing a letter. It is an odd coincidence of accidents

<sup>6</sup> The Attorney-General filed, an information for libel against D'Eon. He absented himself at the time of his trial (in July 1764) and was found guilty.

that has produced abuse on you and your tally in the same week—but yours was a flea-bite.

Thank you, my dear Lord, for your anecdotes relative to Madame Pompadour, her illness, and the pretenders to her succession. I hope she may live till I see her; she is one of the greatest curiosities of the age, and I am a pretty universal virtuoso. The match of my niece with the Duke of P.<sup>7</sup> was, I own, what I hinted at, and what I then believed likely to happen. It is now quite off, and with very extraordinary circumstances; but if I tell it you at all, it must not be in a letter, especially when D'Éons steal letters and print them. It is a secret, and so little to the lover's advantage, that I, who have a great regard for his family, shall not be the first to divulge it.

We had, last night, a magnificent ball at Lady Cardigan's; three sumptuous suppers in three rooms. The house, you know, is crammed with fine things, pictures, china, japan, vases, and every species of curiosity. These are much increased even since I was in favour there, particularly by Lord Montagu's importations. I was curious to see how many quarrels my Lady must have gulped before she could fill her house—truly, not many (though some), for there were very few of her own acquaintance, chiefly recruits of her son and daughter. There was not the souçon of a Bedford, though the town has married Lord Tavistock and Lady Betty<sup>8</sup>—but he is coming to you to France. The Duchess of Bedford told me how hard it was, that I, who had personally offended my Lady Cardigan, should be invited, and that she, who had done nothing, and yet had tried to be reconciled, should not be asked. 'Oh, Madam,' said I, 'be easy as to that point, for though she has invited me, she will

<sup>7</sup> Probably the Duke of Portland.

<sup>8</sup> Lady Elizabeth Montagu, daughter and heiress of fourth Earl of Cardigan (afterwards created Duke of Montagu); m. (1767) Henry Scott, third Duke of Buccleuch; d. 1827.

scarce speak to me—but I let all such quarrels come and go as they please: if people, so indifferent to me, quarrel with me, it is no reason why I should quarrel with them, and they have my full leave to be reconciled when they please.’

I must trouble you once more to know to what merchant you consigned the Princess’s trees, and Lady Hervey’s bibliothèque—I mean for the latter. I did not see the Princess last week, as the loss of my nephew kept me from public places. Of all public places, guess the most unlikely one for the most unlikely person to have been at. I had sent to know how Lady Macclesfield did: Louis brought me word that he could hardly get into St. James’s Square, there was so great a crowd to see my Lord lie in state. At night I met my Lady Milton at the Duchess of Argyle’s, and said in joke, ‘Soh, to be sure, you have been to see my Lord Macclesfield lie in state!’ thinking it impossible—she burst out into a fit of laughter, and owned she had. She and my Lady Temple had dined at Lady Betty’s<sup>9</sup>, put on hats and cloaks, and literally waited on the steps of the house in the thick of the mob, while one posse was admitted and let out again for a second to enter, before they got in.

You will as little guess what a present I have had from Holland—only a treatise of mathematical metaphysics from an author I never heard of, with great encomiums on my taste and knowledge. To be sure, I am warranted to insert this certificate among the testimonia authorum, before my next edition of the Painters. Now, I assure you, I am much more just—I have sent the gentleman word what a perfect ignoramus I am, and did not treat my vanity with a moment’s respite. Your brother has laughed at me, or rather at the poor man who has so mistaken me, as much as ever I did at his absence and flinging down everything at breakfast. Tom, your brother’s man, told him to-day, that

<sup>9</sup> Lady Betty Germain.

Mister Helvoetsluys had been to wait on him—now you are guessing,—did you find out this was Helvetius?

It is piteous late, and I must go to bed, only telling you a bon mot of Lady Bell Finch. Lord Bath owed her half a crown; he sent it next day, with a wish that he could give her a crown. She replied, that though he could not give her a crown, he could give her a coronet, and she was very ready to accept it. I congratulate you on your new house; and am your very sleepy humble servant.

946. TO CHARLES CHURCHILL.

DEAR SIR,

Arlington Street, March 27, 1764.

I had just sent away a half-scolding letter to my sister, for not telling me of Robert's<sup>1</sup> arrival, and to acquaint you both with the loss of poor Lord Malpas, when I received your very entertaining letter of the 19th. I had not then got the draft of the Conqueror's kitchen, and the tiles you were so good as to send me; and grew horribly afraid lest old Dr. Ducarel, who is an ostrich of an antiquary, and can digest superannuated brickbats, should have gobbled them up. At my return from Strawberry Hill yesterday, I found the whole cargo safe, and am really much obliged to you. I weep over the ruined kitchen, but enjoy the tiles. They are exactly like a few which I obtained from the cathedral of Gloucester, when it was new paved; they are inlaid in the floor of my china-room. I would have got enough to pave it entirely; but the canons, who were flinging them away, had so much devotion left, that they enjoined me not to pave a pagoda with them, nor put them to any profane use. As scruples increase in a ratio to their decrease, I did not know but a china-room might casuistically be interpreted a pagoda, and sued for n. My cloister is finished and consecrated ; but as I intend to convert the old blue and white hall next to the choir into a Gothic columbarium, I should seriously be obliged to finish the floor with Norman tiles. However, as I will certainly make you a visit in about two months, I will call till then, and bring the dimensions with me.

LETTER 946.—<sup>1</sup> Robert and Horace, mentioned in this letter, were sons of Charles and Lady Mary Churchill.

Depend upon it, I will pay some of your debts to M. de Lislebonne ; that is, I will make as great entertainment for him as any one can, who almost always dines in my dressing-room ; I will show him everything I have in the morning, as much as any one can, who lies abed till noon and never gets dressed till two o'clock ; and I will endeavour to amuse him with variety of diversions every evening, as much as any one can, who does nothing but play at cards till midnight, or sit behind Lady Mary Coke in a corner box at the Opera. Seriously, though, I will try to convince him that I think distinctions paid to you and me are great favours to me, and will make a point of adding civilities which his name, rank, and alliance with M. de Guerchys can leave necessary. M. de Guerchy is now here, and will find so, particularly at this juncture, that he has been most cruelly and publicly insulted by a most but villainous fellow, one D'Éon, left here by the Count of Nivernois, who in effect is still worse treated. This Count, who has been made minister plenipotentiary, which is a stain on his brain, as you have already heard, had stolen Nivernois's private letters, and has published them, and a thousand other scandals on M. de Guerchy, in a very thick quarto. This affair is much too long for a letter, makes great noise, and gives as great offence. The council have met to-day to consider how to avenge Guerchy and punish D'Éon. A legal remedy is in their power.

I will say little on the subject of Robert ; you know opinion of his capacity, and I dare say think as I do. He is worth taking pains with. I heartily wish those pains may have success. The cure performed by James's powder charms me more than surprises me. I have long thought it could cure everything but physicians.

Politics are all becalmed. Lord Bute's reappearance on the scene, though his name is in no play-bill, may chance to revive the hurly-burly.

My Lord Townshend has not named Charles in his will, who is as much disappointed as he has often disappointed others. We had last night a magnificent ball at my Lady Cardigan's.

Those fiddles play'd that never play'd before,

And we have danc'd, where we shall dance no more.

We, that is, the totum pro parte,—you do not suspect me, I hope, of any youthfullities;—d'autant moins of dancing; I that have rumours of gout flying about me, and would fain coax them into my foot. I have almost tried to make them drunk, and inveigle them thither in their cups; but as they are not at all familiar chez moi, they formalize at wine, as much as a middle-aged woman who is just beginning to drink in private.

Adieu, my dear Sir! my best love to all of you. As Horace is evidently descended from the Conqueror, I will desire him to pluck up the pavement by the roots, when I want to transport it hither.

Yours affectionately,

HORACE WALPOLE.

947. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, April 5, 1764.

YOUR idea, my dear Lord, of the abusive paragraph on you being conceived at Paris, and transmitted hither, tallies exactly with mine. I guessed that a satire on your v establishment must come from thence: I said so immediately to two or three persons; but I did not tell you I thought so, because I did not choose to fill you with suggestions which I had no ground, but in my own reasoning. My arguments convince me I was in the right. Yet, were you master of proofs, the wisest thing you can do, is to act as if you had no suspicion; that is, to act as you have done civilly, but coolly. There are men whom one would not think, no more acknowledge for enemies than friends. One's resentment distinguishes them, and the only gratification they can pay for that distinction is, to double the affront. Wilkes's mind, you see, is sufficiently volatile, when he can already forget Lord Sandwich and the Scotch, and employ himself on you. He will soon flit to other objects when you disregard him. It is my way: I never pursue a sheet, but buzz! out fly a swarm of hornets, insects which never settle upon you, if you don't strike at them; whose venom is diverted to the next object that presents itself.

We have divine weather. The Bishop of Carlisle has been with me two days at Strawberry, where we saw an eclipse<sup>1</sup> to perfection:—not that there was much sight of it. The air was very chill at the time, and the light singular; but there was not a blackbird that left off singing for it. In the evening, the Duke of Devonshire came with the Straffords from t'other end of Twickenham, and drank with us. They had none of them seen the gallery since it was finished; even the chapel was new to the Duke. He was so struck with it that he desired to offer at the altar an incense-pot of silver filigrain.

The election at Cambridge has ended, for the present, in a strange confusion. The proctors, who were of different sides, assumed each a majority; the votes, however, appear to have been equal. The learned in university decisions say an equality is a negative: if so, Lord Hardwicke is excluded. Yet the novelty of the case, it not having been very customary to solicit such a trifling honour, and the antiquated forms of proceeding retained in colleges, leave the matter wide open for further contention, an advantage Lord Sandwich cherishes as much as success. The grave are highly scandalized:—popularity was still warmer. The undergraduates, who, having no votes, had consequently been left to their real opinions, were very near expressing their opinions against Lord Sandwich's friends in the most outrageous manner: hissed they were; and after the election, the juniors burst into the Senate House, elected a fictitious Lord Hardwicke, and chaired him. The indecent arts and applications which had been used by the Twitcherites (as they are called, from Lord Sandwich's nickname, Jemmy Twitcher) had provoked this rage. I will give you but one instance:—A voter, who was blooded on purpose that morning, was brought out of a madhouse with his keeper. This is the great and wise nation, which the philosopher Helvetius is come to study! When he says of us, 'C'est un furieux pays!' he does not know that the literal translation is the true description of us.

LETTER 947.—<sup>1</sup> An eclipse of the sun on April 1, 1764.

I don't know whether I did not tell you some lies in my last; very likely: I tell you what I hear, and do not answer for truth but when I tell you what I know. How should I know anything? I am in no confidence; I think of both sides alike; I care for neither; I ask few questions. The King's journey to Hanover is contradicted. The return of Lord Bute is still a mystery. The zealous say, he declares for the administration; but some of the latter do not trust too much to that security; and, perhaps, they are in the right: I know what I think and why I think it; yet some, who do not go on ill grounds, have a middle opinion, that is not very reconcilable to mine. You will not wonder that there is a mystery, doubt, or irresolution. The scene will be opened further before I get to Paris.

Lord Lyttelton and Lord Temple have dined with each other, and the reconciliation of the former with Mr. Pitt is concluded. It is well that enmities are as frail as friendships.

The Archbishop and Bishops, who are so eager against Dr. Pearse's divorce from his see<sup>2</sup>, not as illegal, but improper, and of bad example, have determined the King, who left it to them, not to consent to it, though the Bishop himself still insists on it. As this decision disappoints Bishop Newton<sup>3</sup>, Lord Bath has obtained a consolatory promise for him of the mitre of London, to the great discomfort of Terrick and Warburton. You see Lord Bath does not hobble up the back stairs for nothing. Oh, he is an excellent courtier! The Prince of Wales shoots him with plaything arrows; he falls down dead; and the child kisses him to life again. Melancholy ambition! I heard him, t'other night, propose himself to Lady Townshend as a rich widow. Such spirits at fourscore are pleasing; but when one has lost all one's children, to be flattering those of kings!

The Bishop of Carlisle told me that t'other day in the House of Lords, Warburton said to another of the bench, 'I was invited by my Lord Mansfield to dine with that Helvetius, but he is a professed patron of atheism, a rascal, and a scoundrel, and I would not countenance him; besides, I should have worked him, and that Lord Mansfield would not have liked.' No, in good truth: who can like such vulgarity! His French, too, I suppose, is equal to his wit and his piety.

<sup>2</sup> The see of Rochester.

<sup>3</sup> Thomas Newton (d. 1782), Bishop of Bristol and Dean of St. Paul's.

I dined, on Tuesday, with the imperial minister; we were two-and-twenty, collected from the four corners of the earth. Since it is become the fashion to banquet whole kingdoms by turns, I should pray, if I was minister, to be sent to Lucca. Have you received D'Éon's very curious book, which I sent by Colonel Keith? I do not find that the administration can discover any method of attacking him. Monsieur de Guerchy very properly determines to take no notice of it. In the meantime, the wit of it gains ground, and palliates the abomination, though it ought not.

Princess Amelia asked me again about her trees. I gave her your message. She does not blame you, but Madame de Boufflers, for sending them so large. Mr. Legge is in a very bad way; but not without hopes: his last night was better. Adieu! my dear lords and ladies!

948. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, April 9, 1764.

THANK you, thank you for your accounts of the Duke of York, and of the reception you have given him. Why, you have feasted him as if you were sovereign of Tuscany! But pray, has the Marshal consigned to you the revenues of the duchy? I tell you, you will be bankrupt; you will lie above ground in a velvet coffin, like the Spanish Ambassador's in Westminster Abbey! I did not doubt but the Duke's good humour would charm you, and his ease; but I should tremble at your magnificence, unless he was his own elder brother, and could indemnify you. If the rumour of your banquets reaches Naples, you will have that whole city swarming to Florence, and knocking at your gate for that bread which they want at home. Seriously, I feel for the poor Neapolitans, since St. Januarius has not the secret of feeding them with five loaves and a few small fishes.

We are full of a wonderful book, just published here, by the Chevalier D'Éon, who was secretary to the Duc de Nivernois, and who was made plenipotentiary in his room, on having carried over the preliminaries, as he had before carried two or three treaties from Petersburg, for which they never paid him. His honours turned his head, the first consequence of which were his extravagance last October at Lord Halifax's, of which you heard. The affection of Monsieur de Nivernois, and the economy of the Duc de Praslin, concurred to try to place him as secretary with Monsieur de Guerchy. This projected tumble enraged him against innocent Monsieur de Guerchy, and the refusal of his arrears against Praslin. Resentment, pride, and frenzy, precipitated him into a literary war with them. He was recalled, refused, and indeed did not dare to return. Necessity followed, and has made him abominable, for he has not only published the Duc de Praslin's letters, and abused De Guerchy intolerably, but has sacrificed Nivernois' letters too, and the private correspondence between the latter and Praslin, and has without any provocation printed the letters of a private friend<sup>1</sup> of his own, who is under Praslin, and who speaks of his master in a manner that may ruin himself. Praslin, Nivernois, and Guerchy, were intimate friends; the two former talk to one another of the latter in a tone of tender contempt, which the last can never forgive, as Praslin never can the carelessness of Nivernois. Praslin says of Guerchy, 'Je crains ses dépêches comme le feu; notre pauvre Guerchy; il ne sait pas du tout écrire—mais nous n'avons de meilleur à employer.' I am glad of it; and yet, though Guerchy is no clerk, he is far from being contemptible. The court of France indeed appears to be so; and, for Monsieur de Praslin, it will suffice to give you the measure of his genius, by telling you of one of his plans,—it was to make the French language universal, by publishing a monthly review! You are to understand, that beside a thousand curious circumstances, D'Éon's book is full of wit and parts; and what makes it more provoking, our ministers know not what to do, nor how to procure any satisfaction to Guerchy.

LETTER 948.—<sup>1</sup> M. de St. Foix; the Duc de Praslin behaved with generosity towards him, and his career, contrary to expectation, was not ruined by D'Éon's indiscretion.

I am going to realize the very low ideas I have of modern France, by a journey to Paris. By all I see and hear, they seem to be sunk in every light; even in the trifles of which they boast themselves, they are gone backwards a century. They are as formal as we were in Queen Anne's days, and believe they make discoveries, when they adopt what we have had these twenty years. For instance, they begin to see beauties in the antique—everything must be à la grecque—accordingly, the lace on their waistcoats is copied from a frieze. Monsieur de Guerchy seeing a Doric fret on a fender at Woburn, which was common before I went abroad, said to the Duchess of Bedford, 'Comment! Madame, vous avez là du grec, sans le savoir!'

A melancholy affair has happened to Lord Ilchester: his eldest daughter, Lady Susan, a very pleasing girl, though not handsome, married herself two days ago at Covent Garden church to O'Brien<sup>2</sup>, a handsome young actor. Lord Ilchester doated on her, and was the most indulgent of fathers. 'Tis a cruel blow.

Our Parliament is going to rise; an event, which, contrary to custom, will, I fancy, produce politics, instead of suspending them. Lord Bute is returned to town; probably not as a simple spectator. Lord Sandwich's contest at Cambridge has taken a strange turn; the numbers for him and Lord Hardwicke were equal, but both sides pretended to a majority of one. The election broke up in confusion, et le tout est à recommencer, with additional heat.

<sup>2</sup> William O'Brien (d. 1815). After his marriage to Lady Susan Fox-Strangways he held various colonial appointments.

I am writing to you in my lovely gallery, with sufficient indifference to all those squabbles—yet the perspective of public affairs is not so agreeable as to promise anybody a quiet enjoyment of their gallery long! 'Tis fortunate, however, that France has not de meilleures têtes à employer.

Arlington Street, Tuesday, 10.

I would not send away my letter until I came to town, that I might give you an account of your brother James, whom I left very ill, and who has been dying of a flux. He is much better, and out of danger. Adieu!

949. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, April 12, 1764.

MAKE yourself perfectly easy, my dear Lord, about newspapers and their tattle; they are not worth a moment's regard. In times of party it is impossible to avoid abuse. If attached to one side, one is pelted by the other; if to neither, by both. One can place oneself above deserving invectives; and then it signifies little, whether they are escaped or not. But when one is conscious that they are unmerited, it is noblest to scorn them—perhaps, I even think, that such a situation is not ineligible. Character is the most precious of all blessings; but, pray allow that it is too sacred to be hurt by anything but itself: does it depend on others, or on its own existence? That character must be fictitious, and formed for man, which man can take away. Your reputation does not depend on Mr. Wilkes, like his own. It is delightful to deserve popularity, and to despise it.

You will have heard of the sad misfortune that has happened to Lord Ilchester by his daughter's<sup>1</sup> marriage with O'Brien the actor. But, perhaps, you do not know the circumstances, and how much his grief must be aggravated by reflection on his own credulity and negligence. The affair has been in train for eighteen months. The swain had learned to counterfeit Lady Sarah Bunbury's hand so well, that in the country Lord Ilchester had himself delivered several of O'Brien's letters to Lady Susan; but it was not till about a week before the catastrophe that the family was apprised of the intrigue. Lord Cathcart went to Miss Read's<sup>2</sup>, the paintress: she said softly to him, 'My Lord, there is a couple in next room that I am sure ought not to be together, I wish your Lordship would look in.' He did, shut the door again, and went directly and informed Lord Ilchester. Lady Susan was examined, flung herself at her father's feet, confessed all, vowed to break off—but—what a but!—desired to see the loved object, and take a last leave. You will be amazed—even this was granted. The parting scene happened the beginning of the week. On Friday she came of age, and on Saturday morning—instead of being under lock and key in the country—walked downstairs, took her footman, said she was going to breakfast with Lady Sarah, but would call at Miss Read's; in the street, pretended to recollect a particular cap in which she was to be drawn, sent the footman back for it, whipped into a hackney chair, was married at Covent Garden church, and set out for Mr. O'Brien's villa at Dunstable. My Lady—my Lady Hertford! what say you to permitting young ladies to act plays, and go to painters by themselves?

Poor Lord Ilchester is almost distracted; indeed, it is the completion of disgrace—even a footman were possible; the publicity of the hero's profession perpetual mortification. Il ne sera pas milord tout comme un. I could not have believed that Lady Susan would stooped so low. She may, however, still keep good company, and say, 'nos numeri sumus'—Lady Mary Duncannon, Lady Caroline Adair<sup>4</sup>, Lady Betty Gallini<sup>5</sup>—the shopkeepers of next age will be mighty well born. If our genealogy had been so confused four hundred years ago, Northington and Berkeley would have had still more difficulty with the obsolete Barony of Bottetourt, which the House of Commons at last has granted him. I have never attended the meetings, though it has been much the fashion, but nor does he care less than I about what they don't care for. I have been as indifferent about other points, of which all the world is talking, as the restriction of franking<sup>6</sup>, and the great cause of Hamilton and Douglas. I am almost tired of what is still more in vogue, our East India affairs. Mir Jaffier and Cossim Aly Cawn, and their deputies, and Sullivan<sup>7</sup>, or rather their principals, employ the public attention, instead of Mogul Pitt and Nabob Bute; the former of whom remains shut up in Asiatic dignity at Hayes, while the other is again mounting his elephant and levying tribute. What Lord Tavistock meant of his invisible Hausman's business<sup>8</sup> in his invective on Mr. Neville<sup>9</sup>, I do not know. He has not been in the House of Commons since the war of 1804. lege. It must have been something he dropped in private.

LETTER 949.—<sup>1</sup> Lady Susan Fox-Strangways.

<sup>2</sup> Catherine Read; d. 1778.

<sup>3</sup> Née Tufton; she married a physician.

<sup>4</sup> Lady Caroline Keppel, daughter of second Earl of Albemarle; m. (1759) Robert Adair, a surgeon.

<sup>5</sup> Lady Elizabeth Bertie, eldest daughter of third Earl of Abingdon; m. John Gallini, a dancing master and manager of the Haymarket Theatre; d. 1804.

<sup>6</sup> An Act had recently passed to prevent 'frauds and abuses in relation to the sending and receiving of letters and packets free from duty of postage.'

<sup>7</sup> Lawrence Sullivan, M.P. for Taunton, and a Director of the India Company.

<sup>8</sup> Mr. Pitt.

<sup>9</sup> Richard Aldworth Neville, for Tavistock; Under Secretary of State, 1748-51.

I was diverted just now with some old rhymes that Mr. Wilkes would have been glad to have North-Britonized for our little Bishop of Osnaburgh <sup>10</sup>.

*Eligimus puerum, puerorum festa colentes,
Non nostrum morem, sed Regis jussa sequentes.*

They were literally composed on the election of a juvenile bishop.

Young Dundas <sup>11</sup> marries Lady Charlotte Fitzwilliam. Sir Lawrence settles four thousand per annum in present, and six more in future—compare these riches got in two years and a half, with D'Éon's account of French economy! Lord Garlies remarries himself with the Duchess of Manchester's next sister, Miss Dashwood <sup>12</sup>. The youngest <sup>13</sup> is to have Mr. Knightley—apropos to D'Éon, the foreign ministers had a meeting yesterday morning at the imperial minister's, and Monsieur de Guerchy went from thence to the King, but on what result I do not know, nor can I find that the lawyers agree that anything can be done against him. There has been a plan of some changes among the Dii Minores, your Lord Norths, and Carysforts, and Ellises, and Frederick Campbells, and such like; but the supposition that Lord Holland would be willing to accommodate the present ministers with the Paymaster's place, being the axle on which this project turned, and his Lordship not being in the accommodating humour, there are half a dozen abortions of new Lords of the Treasury and Admiralty—excuse me if I do not send you this list of embryos; I do

<sup>10</sup> Prince Frederick (afterwards Duke of York) was elected Bishop of Osnabrück in February 1764.

<sup>11</sup> Thomas Dundas (1741-1820), only son of Sir Lawrence Dundas, first Baronet, Contractor and Commissary-General to the Army; cr. (Aug. 18, 1794) Baron Dundas of Aske, Yorkshire; m. (May 1764) Lady Charlotte Fitzwilliam (d. 1838), second daughter of first Earl Fitzwilliam.

<sup>12</sup> Anne (d. 1830), second daughter of Sir James Dashwood, second Baronet, of Kirtlington, Oxfordshire; m. (June 1764) Lord Garlies.

<sup>13</sup> Catherine, third daughter of Sir James Dashwood; m. Lucy Knightley, of Fawsley, Northamptonshire.

not load my head with such fry. I am little more au fait of the confusion that happened yesterday at the East India House; I only know it was exactly like the jumble at Cambridge. Sullivan's list was chosen, all but himself—his own election<sup>14</sup> turns on one disputed vote. Everything is intricate—a presumption that we have few heads very clear. Good night, for I am tired; since dinner I have been at an auction of prints, at the Antiquarian Society in Chancery Lane, at Lady Dalkeith's in Grosvenor Square, and at loo at my niece's in Pall Mall; I left them going to supper, that I might come home and finish this letter; it is half an hour after twelve, and now I am going to supper myself. I suppose all this sounds very sober to you!

950. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Arlington Street, April 12, 1764.

I shall send your MS. volume this week to Mr. Cartwright; and with a thousand thanks. I ought to beg your pardon for having detained it so long. The truth is, I had not time till last week to copy two or three little things at most. Do not let this delay discourage you from lending me more. If I have them in summer, I shall keep them much less time than in winter. I do not send my print with it as you ordered me, because I find it is too large to lie within the volume; and doubling a mezzotinto you know spoils it. You shall have one or more, if you please, whenever I see you.

I have lately made a few curious additions to my collections of various sorts, and shall hope to show them to you at Strawberry Hill. Adieu! dear Sir.

Your much obliged,

HOR. WALPOLE.

<sup>14</sup> As Director.

951. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Arlington Street, April 19, 1764.

I AM just come from the Duchess of Argyll's<sup>1</sup>, where I dined. General Warburton was there, and said it was the report at the House of Lords, that you are turned out—he imagined, of your regiment—but that I suppose is a mistake for the Bedchamber<sup>2</sup>. I shall hear more to-night, and Lady Strafford, who brings you this, will tell you; though to be sure you will know earlier by the post to-morrow. My only reason for writing is, to repeat to you, that whatever you do I shall act with you<sup>3</sup>. I resent anything done to you as to myself. My fortunes shall never be separated from yours—except that some time or other I hope yours will be great, and I am content with mine.

The Manns go on with the business<sup>4</sup>—the letter you received was from Mr. Edward Mann, not from Gal's widow. Adieu! I was going to say, my disgraced friend—how delightful to have a character so unspotted, that the word disgrace recoils on those who displace you! Yours unalterably,

HOR. WALPOLE.

952. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, April 20, 1764.

THERE has been a strong report about town for these two days that your brother is dismissed, not only from the LETTER 951.—<sup>1</sup> Widow of John Campbell, Duke of Argyll. She was sister to General Warburton, and had been Maid of Honour to Queen Anne. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> General Conway was dismissed from command of his regiment and from his post as Groom of the Bedchamber for voting against the legality of general warrants on Feb. 14 and 17, 1764. His dismissal was announced to Conway on April 22, 1764.

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Walpole was then in the House of Commons, member for King's Lynn in Norfolk. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> Of army clothiers. Walpole.

Bedchamber, but from his regiment, and that the latter is given to Lord Pembroke. I do not believe it. Your brother went to Park Place but yesterday morning at ten : he certainly knew nothing of it the night before when we parted, after one, at Grafton House ; nor would he have passed my door yesterday without stopping to tell me of it : no letter has been sent to his house since, nor were any orders arrived at the War Office at half an hour after three yesterday ; nay, though I can give the ministry credit for much folly, and some of them credit for even violence and folly, I do not believe they are so rash as this would amount to. For the Bedchamber, you know, your brother never liked it, and would be glad to get rid of it. I should be sorry for his sake, and for yours too, if it went farther :—gentle and indifferent as his nature is, his resentment, if his profession were touched, would be as serious as such spirit and such abilities could make it. I would not be the man that advised provoking him ; and one man has put himself wofully in his power ! In my own opinion, this is one of the lies of which the time is so fruitful ; I would not even swear that it has not the same parent with the legend I sent you last week, relating to an intended disposition in consequence of Lord Holland's resignation. The court confidently deny the whole plan, and ascribe it to the fertility of Charles Townshend's brain. However, as they have their Charles Townshends too, I do not totally disbelieve it.

The Parliament rose yesterday,—no new peers, not even Irish : Lord Northumberland's list is sent back ungranted. The Duke of Mecklenburgh and Lord Halifax are to have the Garters. Bridgman<sup>1</sup> is turned out of the Green Cloth, which is given to Dick Vernon ; and his place of Surveyor of the Gardens, which young Dickinson held for him, is bestowed on Cadogan<sup>2</sup>. Dyson is made a Lord of Trade. These are all the changes I have heard—not of a complexion that indicates the removal of your brother.

<sup>1</sup> LETTER 952.—George (d. 1767), third son of Sir Orlando Bridgeman, fifth Baronet.

The foreign ministers agreed, as to be sure you have been told, to make Monsieur Guerchy's cause commune; and the Attorney-General has filed an information against D'Éon: that poor lunatic was at the Opera on Saturday, looking like Bedlam. He goes armed, and threatens, what I dare say he would perform, to kill or be killed, if any attempt is made to seize him.

The East Indian affairs have taken a new turn. Sullivan had twelve votes to ten: Lord Clive bribed off one. When they came to the election of chairman, Sullivan desired to be placed in the chair without the disgrace of a ballot; but it was denied. On the scrutiny, the votes appeared eleven and eleven. Sullivan understood the blow, and with three others left the room. Rous, his great enemy, was placed in the chair; since that, I think matters are a little compromised, and Sullivan does not abdicate the direction; but Lord Clive, it is supposed, will go to Bengal in the stead of Colonel Barré, as Sullivan and Lord Shelburne had intended.

Mr. Pitt is worse than ever with the gout. Legge's case is thought very dangerous:—thus stand our politics, and probably will not fluctuate much for some months. At least—I expect to have little more to tell before I see you at Paris, except balls, weddings, and follies, of which, thank the moon! we never have a dearth: for one of the latter class we are obliged to the Archbishop, who, in remembrance, I suppose, of his original profession of midwifery, has ordered some decent alterations to be made in King

<sup>2</sup> Hon. Charles Sloane Cadogan (1728–1807), oldest son of second Baron Cadogan, whom he succeeded in 1776; cr. Earl Cadogan, 1800.

Henry's figure in the Tower. Poor Lady Susan O'Brien is in the most deplorable situation, for her Adonis is a Roman Catholic, and cannot be provided for out of his calling. Sir Francis Delaval, being touched by her calamity, has made her a present—of what do you think?—of a rich gold stuff! The delightful charity! O'Brien comforts himself, and says it will make a shining passage in his little history.

I will tell you but one more folly, and hasten to my signature. Lady Beaulieu was complaining of being waked by a noise in the night: my Lord replied, 'Oh, for my part, there is no disturbing me; if they don't wake me before I go to sleep, there is no waking me afterwards.'

Lady Hervey's table is at last arrived, and the Princess's trees, which I sent her last night; but she wants nothing, for Lady Barrymore is arrived.

I smiled when I read your account of Lord Tavistock's expedition. Do you remember that I made seven days from Calais to Paris, by laying out my journeys at the rate of travelling in England, thirty miles a day; and did not find but that I could have gone in a third of the time? I shall not be such a snail the next time. It is said that, at Lord Tavistock's return, he is to decide whom he will marry. Is it true that the Choiseuls totter, and that the Broglies are to succeed; or is there a Charles Townshend at Versailles? Adieu! my dear Lord.

953. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, April 20, 1764.

I VAINLY flattered myself and you, my dear Sir, with the hopes of your brother James's recovery. Nay, from the message I received yesterday was se'nnight, I concluded him so safe, that, without sending again, I went to Strawberry on Sunday. On Monday I had a party from town; at dinner they told me abruptly, not knowing how much I interest myself in whatever relates to your family, that James was dead. It struck me—for I do not find that the repeated loss of friends familiarizes one to any new blow—it brought my dear Gal full into my mind! the heaviest woe, next to the death of my father and mother, that ever I felt!—But why pour off my own melancholy sensations into your mind?—Your brother Ned and I have been upon very distant terms for near two years, I can say with truth, from no fault of mine—it was therefore not grievous to me to pity and forgive him—I wrote him a very kind letter—he took it as I wished—I went to see him, and I hope all unkindness is mutually forgotten! He lessened, I own, my concern for the loss of James, who is dead worth seventy thousand pounds, and who has given sixty-nine from the most amiable and most deserving of brothers, who is ruining himself for Princes of the blood, and who has been so long out of England, that he still loves his country for its own sake, prides himself on maintaining its honour, and does not, like his countrymen, think of nothing but turning his country to account. Do you know such a man? Poor James, alas! did not, nor could comprehend worth at a distance. The handsome provision he has made for your sisters inspires me with so much charity for his memory, that I impute to the narrowness of his ideas his want of feeling for your virtues—had he known you, how could he have thought even Mrs. Foote's merit preferable to yours?

LETTER 953.—Not in C.; now first printed from Walpole's transcript in possession of Earl Waldegrave.

This death will reach you unseasonably, for I find by your second dispatch, for which I thank you, that you are to have a second visit from your royal guest<sup>1</sup>. The boon<sup>2</sup> he means to ask for you, would, I know, be of consequence where you are; where impoverished nobilities are forced to comfort themselves with all they have left of their great ancestors, their blood—but I, who know that money is a blessing when it is obtained by that rare channel, desert, cannot be content with your being paid with plumes and cherry-coloured silk—if you had voted against your country, or violated its laws, I should not be sorry if they even gave you the Garter! I tell you, it would not hurt me to see you paying twelve hundred pounds to heralds, when you could not pay your butcher's bill!

<sup>1</sup> The Duke of York.

<sup>2</sup> The Order of the Bath.

I like the mezzo termine which they have found at Rome for receiving the Duke of York. Who hit on that expedient of the Borghese and Corsini? It could not be the triple-crowned dotard himself—for the idea is worthy of his predecessor<sup>3</sup>. Perhaps my sensible old man would have gone farther, and have packed Our Lady herself to Albano with her Stuarts, and have received the Protestant prince like a great sovereign; unless he had found out, what the French have not yet found out (v. D'Éon's book), that we are no longer la plus importante cour de l'Europe. Apropos, the foreign ministers have agreed to make Guerchy's cause cause commune; and have complained to the King, who has ordered the Attorney-General to file a bill against D'Éon.

I exhausted my whole budget of news last post, and have only to add, that the Parliament is prorogued, and that the Duke of Mecklenburgh and Lord Halifax are to have the vacant Garters. There is much talk of an approaching change in the French ministry, and that the Broglies are to succeed the Choiseuls. I am sorry for it; we shall never get so weak an administration in France as the present, unless we send them our own. Adieu!

<sup>3</sup> Benedict XIV.

954. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Strawberry Hill, Saturday night, eight o'clock,
April 21, 1764.

I WRITE to you with a very bad headache ; I have passed a night, for which George Grenville and the Duke of Bedford shall pass many an uneasy one ! Notwithstanding I heard from everybody I met, that your regiment, as well as Bed-chamber, were taken away, I would not believe it, till last night the Duchess of Grafton told me, that the night before the Duchess of Bedford said to her, ' Are not you very sorry for poor Mr. Conway ? He has lost everything.' When the Witch of Endor pities, one knows she has raised the devil.

I am come hither alone to put my thoughts into some order, and to avoid showing the first sallies of my resentment, which I know you would disapprove ; nor does it become your friend to rail. My anger shall be a little more manly, and the plan of my revenge a little deeper laid than in peevish bons mots. You shall judge of my indignation by its duration.

In the meantime, let me beg you, in the most earnest and most sincere of all professions, to suffer me to make your loss as light as it is in my power to make it : I have six thousand pounds in the funds ; accept all, or what part you want. Do not imagine I will be put off with a refusal. The retrenchment of my expenses, which I shall from this hour commence, will convince you that I mean to replace your fortune as far as I can. When I thought you did not want it, I had made another disposition. You have ever been the dearest person to me in the world. You have shown that you deserve to be so. You suffer for your spotless integrity. Can I hesitate a moment to show that there is at least one man who knows how to value you ?

The new will, which I am going to make, will be a testimonial of my own sense of virtue.

One circumstance has heightened my resentment. If it was not an accident, it deserves to heighten it. The very day on which your dismissal was notified, I received an order from the Treasury for the payment of what money was due to me there. Is it possible that they could mean to make any distinction between us? Have I separated myself from you? Is there that spot on earth where I can be suspected of having paid court? Have I even left my name at a minister's door since you took your part? If they have dared to hint this, the pen that is now writing to you will bitterly undeceive them.

I am impatient to see the letters you have received, and the answers you have sent. Do you come to town? If you do not, I will come to you to-morrow se'nnight, that is, the 29th. I give no advice on anything, because you are cooler than I am—not so cool, I hope, as to be insensible to this outrage, this villainy, this injustice. You owe it to your country to labour the extermination of such ministers!

I am so bad a hypocrite, that I am afraid of showing how deeply I feel this. Yet last night I received the account from the Duchess of Grafton with more temper than you believe me capable of; but the agitation of the night disordered me so much, that Lord John Cavendish, who was with me two hours this morning, does not, I believe, take me for a hero. As there are some who I know would enjoy my mortification, and who probably designed I should feel my share of it, I wish to command myself—but that struggle shall be added to their bill. I saw nobody else before I came away but Legge, who sent for me and wrote the enclosed for you. He would have said more both to you and Lady Ailesbury, but I would not let him, as he is so ill: however, he thinks himself that he shall live. I hope he will! I would not lose a shadow that can haunt these ministers.

I feel for Lady Ailesbury, because I know she feels just as I do—and it is not a pleasant sensation. I will say no more, though I could write volumes. Adieu!

Yours, as I ever have been and ever will be,

HOR. WALPOLE.

955. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Arlington Street, April 24, 1764.

I REJOICE that you feel your loss<sup>1</sup> so little. That you act with dignity and propriety does not surprise me. To have you behave in character and with character, is my first of all wishes; for then it will not be in the power of man to make you unhappy. Ask yourself—Is there a man in England with whom you would change character? Is there a man in England who would not change with you? Then think how little they have taken away!

For me, I shall certainly conduct myself as you prescribe. Your friend shall say and do nothing unworthy of your friend. You govern me in everything but one; I mean, the disposition I have told you I shall make<sup>2</sup>. Nothing can alter that but a great change in your fortune. In another point you partly misunderstood me. That I shall explain hereafter.

I shall certainly meet you here on Sunday, and very cheerfully. We may laugh at a world in which nothing of us will remain long but our characters. Adieu! the dear family!

Yours eternally,

HOR. WALPOLE.

LETTER 955.—<sup>1</sup> Of his employments. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> Of leaving a considerable part of his fortune to Mr. Conway. Walpole.

956. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, May 10, 1764.

I HOPE I have done well for you, and that you will be content with the execution of your commission. I have bought you two pictures. No. 14, which is by no means a good picture, but it went so cheap and looked so old-fashionably, like landscapes over chimneys in ancient mansions, that I ventured to give eighteen shillings for it. The other is very pretty, No. 17; two sweet children, undoubtedly by Sir Peter Lely. This costs you four pounds ten shillings. What shall I do with them—how convey them to you? The picture of Lord Romney<sup>1</sup>, which you are so fond of, was not in this sale, but I suppose remains with Lady Sidney<sup>2</sup>. I bought for myself much the best picture in the auction, a fine Vandyck of the famous Lady Carlisle<sup>3</sup> and her sister Leicester in one piece: it cost me nine-and-twenty guineas. In general the pictures did not go high, which I was glad of, that the vulture<sup>4</sup> who sells them may not be more enriched than could be helped. There was a whole-length of Sir Henry Sidney<sup>5</sup>, which I should have liked, but it went for fifteen guineas. Thus ends half the glory of Penshurst! Not one of the miniatures was sold.

I go to Strawberry to-morrow for a week. When do you

LETTER 956.—<sup>1</sup> Henry Sidney, first Earl of Romney; d. 1704.

<sup>2</sup> Elizabeth (d. 1783), second daughter of Hon. Thomas Sidney, fourth son of fourth Earl of Leicester, and wife of William Perry. She was spoken of and addressed as 'Lady Sidney,' but had no right to that name or title.

<sup>3</sup> The Ladies Lucy and Dorothy Percy, daughters of ninth Earl of Northumberland, married respectively to James Hay, Earl of Carlisle, and Robert Sidney, Earl of Leicester.

<sup>4</sup> Hon. Anne Howard (d. 1775), eldest daughter of sixth Baron Howard of Effingham; m. (1729) Sir William Yonge, fourth Baronet, of Escote and Culleton, Devonshire. Under the will of Lady Sidney Sherard (who died in 1758), eldest sister of Mrs. Perry (or 'Lady Sidney') mentioned above, Lady Yonge inherited half the Sidney estates in Kent.

<sup>5</sup> Sir Henry Sidney, K.G. (1529-1586), Lord Deputy of Ireland.

come to Frogmore? I wish to know, because I shall go soon to Park Place, and would not miss the visit you have promised me. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

957. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, May 14, 1764.

I HAVE received three letters from you, my dear Sir, on the back of one another, with accounts of the Duke of York's motions, receptions, and entertainments. I give you a thousand thanks for them; they have amused me as much as I suppose they have vexed the phantoms at Rome<sup>1</sup>. It must be grievous to them to be nosed on their own Catholic dunghill.

I said you would die insolvent; I now tell you you will kill yourself before you are insolvent. You are not made for such fatigues. I approve what you have done as much as his Royal Highness does; but though you represent the strongest nation in the world, you must recollect you are one of its weakest members. Your zeal is right, your expense could not be better placed than for your King's brother; but the Lord send you well out of all this! It hurts me, too, to think that before your festivities are cold you will receive the news of your brother's death. Be blooded, go to bed, and compose yourself. I wish poor Dr. Cocchi, with his calm philosophy, was at your elbow; the agitation of your mind and body will give you a fever.

Your brother Ned forgot to tell me of Horace's intended journey to Florence: you know how much I have wished it; and though you differed with me, I foresee the transport with which you will embrace him. He is a most amiable lad, and a very you in gentleness.

What shall I tell you of England? Nothing that I can approve or that you must disapprove, therefore I shall say little on it, and desire you will say less. I can never doubt your affection; but I am not so selfish as to expect you should hurt yourself merely to show me that you feel for my friends. In short, you and I are so circumstanced at present that it would not be just in me to make you the depository of my disgusts; nor wise in you to enter into them. I will therefore only write you news as I used to do, without comments; and you will talk to me in return of things of as little moment. To the immediate purport of this exordium, and to what I am going to tell you, I insist that you make me not one word of reply. If you are silent, I shall know your heart; but if you utter a syllable I will only look upon it as a compliment. Mr. Conway<sup>2</sup> is turned out of the King's Bedchamber, and of his regiment. You will judge of my love for you, when even my love for him is silent on such a proceeding. One would think that he was actuated by the same motives, for his temper, patience, resignation, are beyond example. His calmness and content prove how much his mind is at ease. He would not bear his sufferings with such fortitude if his conduct had not been as pure as virtue itself. Indeed his philosophy goes farther than I like, for it extends to me. He has insisted that I, who am far from such stoicism, should be as mild as he is. It is difficult to govern one's own passions, but much more hard to let anybody else govern them. Yet, here I sit, with my arms folded, and am to wait till Virtue is pleased to acknowledge us as her martyrs. She must make haste, or I shall lose my patience; nay, when she does arrive, I believe I shall be so honest

<sup>2</sup> Henry Seymour Conway, only brother of Francis, Earl of Hertford, and member for Thetford, was turned out of all his employments for opposing the administration on the persecution of Wilkes. Walpole.

as to tell her that she is obliged to Mr. Conway, not to me, for my wearing her livery.

I will inquire for a ship to send you two copies of D'Éon's book, as you desire. It will divert you extremely. He promises another soon, but I conclude he has wasted his materials already, and that his next publication will make him entirely forgotten. He told people in the Park the other day, that Madame de Guerchy (who is remarkably plain) was going to Paris, to take Madame de Pompadour's place. We do not hear that it is seriously filled up; I mean in the cabinet, for in the Bedchamber it has long been executed by deputies. Adieu!

958. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

MY DEAR LORD,                      Arlington Street, May 27, 1764. Very late.

I am just come home, and find a letter from you, which gives me too much pain to let me resist answering it directly (though past one in the morning), as I go out of town early to-morrow.

I must begin with telling you, let me feel what I will from it, how much I admire it. It is equal to the difficulty of your situation, and expressed with all the feeling which must possess you. I will show it your brother, as there is nothing I would not and will not do to preserve the harmony and friendship which has so much distinguished your whole lives.

You have guessed, give me leave to say, at my wishes, rather than answered to anything I have really expressed. The truth was, I had no right to deliver any opinion on so important a step as you have taken, without being asked. Had you consulted me, which certainly was not proper for you to do, it would have been with the utmost reluctance that I should have brought myself to utter my sentiments, and only then, if I had been persuaded that friendship exacted it from me; for it would have been a great deal for me to have taken upon myself: it would have been a step, either way, liable to subject me to reproach from you in your own mind, though you would have been too generous to have blamed me in any other way. Now, my dear Lord, do me the justice to say, that the part I have acted was the most proper and most honourable one I could take. Did I, have I, dropped a syllable, endeavouring to bias your judgement one way or the other? My constant language has been, that I could not think, when a younger brother had taken a part disagreeable to his elder, and totally opposite, even without consulting him, that the elder was under any obligation to relinquish his own opinion, and adopt the younger's. In my heart I undoubtedly wished that, even in party, your union should not be dissolved; for that union would be the strength of both.

This is the summary of a text on which I have infinitely more to say; but the post is so far from being a proper conveyance, that I think the most private letter transmitted in the most secure manner is scarcely to be trusted. Should I resolve, if you require it, to be more explicit (and I certainly shall not think of saying a word more, unless I know that it is strongly your desire I should), it must only be upon the most positive assurance on your honour (and on their honour as strictly given too) that not a syllable of what I shall say shall be communicated to any person living. I except nobody, except my Lady and Lord Beauchamp. What I should say now is now of no consequence, but for your information. It can tend to nothing else. It therefore does not signify, whether said now, or at any distant time hereafter, or when we meet. If, as perhaps you may at first suppose, it had the least view towards making you quit your embassy, you should not know it at all ; for I think that would be the idlest and most unwise step you could take ; and believe me, my affection for your brother will never make me sacrifice your honour to his interest. I have loved you both unalterably, and without the smallest cloud between us, from children. It is true, as you observe, that party, with many other mischiefs, produces dissensions in families. I can by no means agree with you, that all party is founded in interest—surely, you cannot think that your brother's conduct was not the result of the most unshaken honour and conscience, and as surely the result of no interested motive ? You are not less mistaken, if you believe that the present state of party in this country is not of a most serious nature, and not a mere contention for power and employments. That topic, however, I shall pass over ; the discussion, perhaps, would end where it began. As you know I never tried to bring you to my opinion before, I am very unlikely to aim at it now. Let this and the rest of this subject sleep for the present. I trust I have convinced you that my behaviour has been both honourable and respectful towards you ; and that, though I think with your brother and am naturally very warm, I have acted in the most dispassionate manner, and had recourse to nothing but silence, when I was not so happy as to meet you in opinion.

This subject has kept me so long, and it is so very late, that you will forgive me if I only skim over the gazette part of my letter—my next shall be more in my old gossiping style.

Dr. Terrick and Dr. Lambe<sup>1</sup> are made Bishops of London and Peterborough, without the nomination or approbation of the ministers. The Duke of Bedford declared this warmly, for you know his own administration always allow him to declare his genuine opinion, that they may have the credit of making him alter it. He was still more surprised at the Chancellor's being made an earl<sup>2</sup> without his knowledge, after he had gone out of town, blaming the Chancellor's coldness on D'Éon's affair, which is now dropped. Three marquises going to be given to Lords Cardigan, Northumberland, and Townshend<sup>3</sup>, may not please his Grace more, though they may his minister<sup>4</sup>, who may be glad his master is angry, as it may produce a good quieting draught for himself.

LETTER 958.—<sup>1</sup> Robert Lambe, Dean of Peterborough ; d. 1769.

The Northumberlands are returned; Hamilton<sup>5</sup> is dismissed, and the Earl of Drogheda<sup>6</sup> made Secretary in his room.

Mechell<sup>7</sup> is recalled by desire of this court, who requested to have it done without giving their reasons, as Sir Charles Williams had been sent from Berlin in the same manner.

Colonel Johnston is also recalled from Minorca. He had been very wrong-headed with his governor, Sir Richard<sup>8</sup>; that wound was scarce closed, when the judicious deputy chose to turn out a brother-in-law of Lord Bute. Lady Falkener's daughter is to be married to a young rich Mr. Crewe, a Macarone, and of our loo. Mr. Skreene has married Miss Sumner, and her brother gives her 10,000*l*. Good night! The watchman cries three!

959. TO THOMAS PITT.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, June 5, 1764.

You tell me a report has been maliciously raised and propagated by Mr. Grenville's enemies, that in the conversation which passed at your house, Mr. Grenville said,

<sup>2</sup> Lord Henley became Earl of Northington.

<sup>3</sup> These marquises were not conferred.

<sup>4</sup> Richard Rigby.

<sup>5</sup> William Gerard Hamilton.

<sup>6</sup> Charles Moore (1730-1822), sixth Earl (afterwards first Marquis) of Drogheda.

<sup>7</sup> Michel, Prussian Minister in London.

<sup>8</sup> Sir Richard Lyttelton.

that if Mr. Conway voted in Parliament according to his conscience, he was unfit to have any command in the King's army. You add, that what makes this report more painful to Mr. Grenville, is that I am said not to have discouraged it: and you conclude with desiring, if I agree with your state of that conversation (which you send me to refresh my memory), that I would use my endeavours to put a stop to a groundless report.

I will begin with telling you, that I am far from having forgot the conversation you mention. At the very time it passed I thought it so extraordinary, that the next day I wrote down an account of it; as I did also of what I heard passed at Mr. Grenville's on the same subject. I have it at this moment lying before me, and therefore can speak very accurately on that topic.

If, therefore, you ask me whether Mr. Grenville said totidem verbis, that if Mr. Conway voted in Parliament according to his conscience, he was unfit to have any command in the army, I answer directly and truly, no: I never heard him say those words, nor have I certainly ever said he did. Yet I think the report may easily have arisen from what he assuredly did say, and which I avow I have said he said.

Mr. Grenville said twice, the King cannot trust his army in the hands of those who are against his measures. Now give me leave to put you a little in mind. The expression of the King not trusting his army in such hands, you first dropped yourself in my room. You cannot forget the surprise it occasioned in me, and the answer I made you. Did I not,—I ask you upon your honour,—reply, ‘Good God! Mr. Pitt, what are you going to do with the army? or what do you think Mr. Conway is going to do? Do you think he is going into rebellion? If the tenor of Mr. Conway's services and character do not entitle him to be trusted with a regiment,

I do not know what can entitle any man to one. Is he factious? what do you think he is going to do?' Mr. Grenville at night, in your room, twice used the same expression of not trusting the army in his hands.

I did then, and still think them the most extraordinary words ever used by English minister. I repeated the same answer that I made to you. I appeal to yourself, whether this is not strictly true? When I saw Mr. Conway, I told him of these words before Lady Ailesbury; I mentioned them to the Duke of Devonshire; I believe, when it was agreed the Duke of Richmond should be present at the conversation between Mr. Grenville and Mr. Conway, I told them to his Grace, but of this I will not be positive. I do know that, to prevent any mistakes thereafter, I set down the very words; and I am glad I did so. That paper has been seen by those who will bear me witness that it is no new account, nor do you or Mr. Grenville I dare to say suspect me capable of having written it now, and calling it an old account; nor could it be necessary. I desired to have you for witness to my conversation with Mr. Grenville, being so much convinced of the rigid strictness of your honour, that though much more Mr. Grenville's friend than mine, I was sure you would do me justice, if it should be necessary to appeal to you. I do appeal to you in the most solemn manner; nay, I appeal to Mr. Grenville himself, whether every syllable that I have here stated to you be not most scrupulously and conscientiously true,—not only in syllables, but in sense and purport; for I would scorn to report words, however true, which yet, by adding to or taking from, I should set in a different light from that in which they were intended by the speaker.

I now come to the case as you state it, which in general agrees very much with my own paper; but we differ widely in the conclusions we draw from what passed. You allow

I insisted principally upon the high point of honour and delicacy of sentiment in Mr. Conway, and that I thought him incapable, in any situation, of doing anything but from mere motives of conscience and honour. Has he not acted invariably as I foretold? Has he not sacrificed his fortune to his conscience? and do you not, ipsissimis verbis, own, that it would have been an absurdity in Mr. Grenville to say Mr. Conway was unfit to have any command in the King's army if he voted according to his conscience; unless, indeed, his conscience leading him to a systematical opposition to the King's government, in that case Mr. Grenville may be construed to have said that such a conscience must render it very difficult and unlikely for him to continue long in his situation? Without dwelling on the words, such a conscience (though a man acting uniformly in opposition, against his interest, may be supposed as conscientious as a man acting uniformly with his interest for government), it is evident from your words and opinions, that if Mr. Conway's conscience led him to opposition, he probably would be removed. If, therefore, Mr. Conway's conscience led him, not to systematical opposition, but to opposition to one single measure, and yet he has been dismissed, will not the world say with reason—indeed, can it say otherwise? than—that Mr. Grenville's declared opinion led him to remove officers for systematical opposition from conscience, and that the practice has been to remove them for one single conscientious vote? And unless Mr. Grenville declares (which I, if authorized, will publish with pleasure) that he had no hand in the removal of Mr. Conway, I do not see how anybody can help thinking that Mr. Grenville's opinion and practice went together. You approve the wisdom of removing men in the former case; I wonder you did, even in speculation; surely the execution has not convinced you of the wisdom of this measure, which has so much offended mankind, and has intimidated nobody. For in all this you must see clearly, that if I contradicted the essence of the report, I must contradict you and the truth, who agree together.

You allow I was positive in opinion, that Mr. Conway neither was, nor intended to be in opposition; I was most assuredly of that opinion, and am now convinced that I was in the right, as in every question that did not relate to the warrants he voted with the administration. In the next point, which is matter of opinion, you think Mr. Grenville showed every mark of kindness and friendly disposition to Mr. Conway. Give me leave to say it did not strike me in that light. Mr. Grenville, with great warmth and eagerness, persisted in thinking Mr. Conway voted in opposition, which occasioned, what you own, my repeated declarations of believing the contrary. This did not strike me as any great mark of kindness or confidence to either Mr. Conway or me. Less did I think it kind to insist with the vehemence Mr. Grenville used, on positive declarations from Mr. Conway. Such commands appear to me highly unconstitutional, and therefore I do not see how they can be made with friendship to the party. Those demands of positive declaration were, I believe, made before the Duke of Richmond, as well as to me.

You know I went so far as to tell you that Mr. Conway was, I firmly believed, not only not in opposition, but should he be ever so ill-used, and the ministry should propose a question which he thought right for this country, he would vote for it. I remain exactly of the same opinion. He has been as ill, as hardly, and as unjustly used, as ever man was; and yet he will do what he thinks right, though his behaviour may serve his bitterest enemies; for he will never suffer his personal resentments to carry him to do a wrong thing, even to his foes, much less towards his country.

When I say he has been ill-used, I repeat with great sincerity—and you who have known, and are so good as to allow my real regard to Mr. Grenville, will believe me—that few things would give me more pleasure than to be assured that the dismissal of Mr. Conway was without Mr. Grenville's consent or approbation.

You say that below the Bar of the House of Lords, Mr. Grenville told you and me that Mr. Conway had declared that he was not then engaged, nor did at that time intend to engage in any system of opposition; but at the same time desired not to be understood to intend to separate himself from the Dukes of Grafton and Devonshire, to whom he was obliged. This agrees with the message I myself delivered to Mr. Grenville from Mr. Conway, that he was in no opposition, nor thought of being in any; but in answer to Mr. Grenville's question, whether there was anything he would like, he declared he would accept nothing while those Dukes were dissatisfied with the administration. Both your state of the case and mine, which agree together, do not at all coincide with Mr. Grenville's letter to Lord Hertford, that he had found Mr. Conway's connections with his friends unbounded.

I have omitted, for the last, one passage, which I had forgotten in my own memorandums, which yet, from your assertion—who I am sure will adhere in every point to the strict matter of fact, let it affect whom it will—I am not only persuaded passed, but I think I recollect it myself, from the circumstance of the particular day on which it passed. You say Mr. Grenville told me that a regular system of opposition to government would render any one unfit for a high rank in military command; and that in some instances, as in cases of tumults and insurrections, such a man would be more dangerous to the King and Commonwealth.

I am sure I do not remember the word Commonwealth being used ; though if you assert it I cannot take upon me to say it was not used, for I remember this salvo but imperfectly. I know the day of the conversation was after the tumult on the burning of the North Briton. Mr. Grenville was much flustered, and very likely applied the case of the day to the subject we were discussing ; and if he did, it probably made the less impression on me, because my mind had been already struck with the same singular words from you before the tumult happened ; and therefore, when I heard them repeated by a minister, it was natural for me to conclude you had heard them from his mouth, as you came to me with a message from him ; and I am bold to declare, such words in the mouth of a minister are to me exceedingly alarming. As such I have repeated them, and I leave you, who know me, to judge whether I will retract anything I have said, which I am particularly authorized, by having taken down the words, to affirm are true, and to the very substance of which you agree, as I am sure you will to the precise words, being thus put in mind of them, especially as you own you are not exact in the very words.

I love and honour Mr. Conway above any man in the world ; I would lay down my life for him ; and shall I see him every day basely and falsely traduced in newspapers and libels, and not say what I know is true, when it sets his character in so fair and noble a light ? I am asked to discourage reports. I am ready to discourage such as are not true, and do not come from me.

Mr. Grenville is welcome to publish this letter ; it will be the fullest answer to anything that is said against him without foundation. Let Mr. Grenville, in his turn, discourage and disavow the infamous calumnies published against Mr. Conway, the authors of which, I daresay, are unknown to Mr. Grenville, but who, not content with seeing Mr. Conway's fortune ruined, would stab his reputation likewise.

I thank God! they cannot fix a blemish upon it. I will certainly bear witness to it, as much as lies in me. Fear or favour will not intimidate or warp my friendship. Yet I wish Mr. Grenville so well, that I will take the liberty of giving him through you this piece of advice.

It is high time for the administration to discountenance and disclaim the language held by all the writers on their side, particularly by the author of the Address to the Public, that officers are to be dismissed for their behaviour in Parliament. Such doctrines are new, and never were avowed before. They clash with all parliamentary freedom; they render the condition of officers in Parliament most abject, slavish, and dishonourable; they alarm all thinking men, and, I will do them the justice to say, do not seem universally the sentiments of ministers themselves, as so many generals and officers in Parliament, who are avowedly in opposition, retain their commissions; a circumstance that makes the singling out of Mr. Conway, who was not in opposition, look more like the effect of private pique and resentment somewhere or other, I don't know where, than a settled determination to make the officers in general the absolute tools of the ministry.

I will now conclude this tedious letter with adding, by your leave, a few words on myself.

It has more than once been insinuated to me, that I might ruin myself if I took Mr. Conway's part. I do Mr. Grenville the justice to declare, that I believe him incapable of countenancing such insinuations. Come they from whom they will, I despise them. My place is a patent for life, and as much my property, by law, as your estate is yours. Oh! but I have been told the payments may be delayed or stopped: they may, by violence or injustice, and that insinuation I despise likewise.

Mr. Grenville's civilities and regularity on these occasions

I acknowledge with gratitude, though I disclaim all dependence, all paying of court. I would fling up my patent to-morrow, if it was capable of making me do one servile act, if it deterred me one moment from following the dictates of conscience and friendship. Both in Parliament and out of it I will say and do what I think right and honest. I was born free, and I will live and die so, in spite of patents and places. I may be ruined, as Mr. Conway has been, but I will preserve my honour inviolate. If I did not, I might receive you here with more magnificence, but I had rather receive you, as I hope to do, without a blush. You know the passion I have for Strawberry Hill; but trust me at this moment I know I could with pleasure see it sold, if reduced to it by suffering for my country and my principles. Remember this, my dear Sir,—you, who are much younger, and have longer to live than me. It is this satisfaction of conscience which sweetens every evil, and makes Mr. Conway at this instant the happiest man in England.

I am your sincere and affectionate humble servant,

HORACE WALPOLE.

P.S. I am so desirous of not saying a syllable that is not strictly true, that I choose to contradict in a postscript, rather than erase one passage in which I had said what I believed had passed. On showing this letter to the Duke of Richmond, his Grace says he cannot say that before him Mr. Grenville made a demand of a positive declaration, though he expressed a strong desire that Mr. Conway would declare what his general system was.

If I have, therefore, stated the argument too strongly, I willingly retract so much as is overcharged; though I must own I see little difference between a minister demanding a positive declaration of a member of Parliament, and expressing a strong desire of a declaration; because, if a minister will take upon himself to catechize members of Parliament, he must know that either the gentler or rougher method will be effectual, or both will be resisted. The Duke says he remembers very well my telling him the words cannot trust his army, &c., before his Grace saw Mr. Grenville<sup>1</sup>.

960. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Arlington Street, June 5, 1764.

You will wonder that I have been so long without giving you any signs of life ; yet, though not writing to you, I have

LETTER 959.—<sup>1</sup> Walpole's motives in writing this letter are explained in his Memoirs of George III (ed. 1894, vol. ii. pp. 8-9) :—' On the 1st of June I received a letter from Mr. Thomas Pitt, desiring me to contradict a report said to come from me, charging Mr. Grenville with having said that if Mr. Conway voted according to his conscience he must be turned out. Thus had they dressed up the real report and substance in absurd terms that nobody might believe it. I immediately comprehended that this was a mandate issued to me as an inferior officer of the Exchequer, to justify Grenville and sacrifice my friend. I perceived, too, the advantage they had put into my hands, and determined to make the most of it. Pitt's letter was so incredibly weak, and owned so much, that nothing was easier than to confute it. To add to their confusion, I had preserved exact minutes of the two conversations with Pitt and Grenville, of which they had had no suspicion. I felt the opportunity of doing justice both to Mr. Conway and to myself, and of making Mr. Grenville understand, that if he did not do me justice in the regularity of my payments, he was at my mercy, and must expect those letters would be laid before the public, if not before the House of Commons. This I hinted obscurely, being determined that nothing but persecution should drive me to that step. Knowing, however, the narrowness of Grenville's mind, it was useful to curb him by this menace, as I did too in the Counter Address, and very successfully. I wrote a long, firm, and unpleasant letter in answer to Pitt's, and received another from him before there could be time for it (as he was in Cornwall), but by Grenville's opening mine at the post : for with him was it concerted ; and yet so flimsy, so fallen from the arrogance of the former was their reply, that I enjoyed not only triumph, but, I own, the teasing amusement of keeping them in hot water many months—the only use I allowed myself to make of those letters in punishing their culpable behaviour—moderate revenge enough after such insolence ! and in which, when I had suffered the period to elapse, Grenville was far from having the generosity to imitate me. My payments were carefully made before the Parliament opened. When I had let the Session pass over without making use of the materials in my hands, an embargo was laid on the income of my employment. . . . I found means to retaliate, without violating the strictest laws of honour : nor have they been able to reproach me, though I had such opportunities of resembling them.'

been employed about you, as I have ever since the 21st of April; a day your enemies shall have some cause to remember. I had writ nine or ten sheets of an answer<sup>1</sup> to the Address to the Public, when I received the enclosed mandate<sup>2</sup>. You will see my masters order me, as a subaltern of the Exchequer, to drop you and defend them—but you will see too, that, instead of obeying, I have given warning. I would not communicate any part of this transaction to you, till it was out of my hands, because I knew your affection for me would not approve my going so far—but it was necessary. My honour required that I should declare my adherence to you in the most authentic manner. I found that some persons had dared to doubt whether I would risk everything for you. You see by these letters that Mr. Grenville himself had presumed so. Even a change in the administration, however unlikely, might happen before I had any opportunity of declaring myself; and then those who should choose to put the worst construction, either on my actions or my silence, might say what they pleased. I was waiting for some opportunity: they have put it into my hands, and I took care not to let it slip. Indeed they have put more into my hands, which I have not let slip neither. Could I expect they would give me so absurd an account of Mr. Grenville's conduct, and give it me in writing? They can only add to this obligation that of provocation to print my letter, which, however strong in facts, I have taken care to make very decent in terms, because it imports us to have the candid (that is, I fear, the mercenary) on our side;—no, that we must not expect, but at least disarmed.

Lord Tavistock has flung his handkerchief to Lady

LETTER 960.—<sup>1</sup> A Counter Address to the Public on the late Dismission of a General Officer. (See Lord Oxford's Works, vol. ii. p. 547.)

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Pitt's letter of June 1, mentioned in note on preceding letter.

Elizabeth Keppel. They all go to Woburn on Thursday, and the ceremony is to be performed as soon as her brother, the Bishop, can arrive from Exeter. I am heartily glad the Duchess of Bedford does not set her heart on marrying me to anybody; I am sure she would bring it about. She has some small intention of coupling my niece and Dick Vernon, but I have forbidden the banns.

The Birthday, I hear, was lamentably empty. We had a funeral loo last night in the great chamber at Lady Bel Finch's: the Duke, Princess Emily, and the Duchess of Bedford were there. The Princess entertained her Grace with the joy the Duke of Bedford will have in being a grandfather; in which reflection, I believe, the grandmotherhood was not forgotten. Adieu!

961. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, June 8, 1764.

To be sure, you have heard the event of this last week? Lord Tavistock has flung his handkerchief, and, except a few jealous sultanas, and some sultanas valides who had marketable daughters, everybody is pleased that the lot is fallen on Lady Elizabeth Keppel.

The house of Bedford came to town last Friday. I supped with them that night at the Spanish Ambassador's, who has made Powis House<sup>1</sup> magnificent. Lady Elizabeth was not there, nor mentioned. On the contrary, by the Duchess's conversation, which turned on Lady Betty Montagu, there were suspicions in her favour. The next morning Lady Elizabeth received a note from the Duchess of Marlborough, insisting on seeing her that evening. When she arrived at Marlborough House, she found nobody but the Duchess and Lord Tavistock. The Duchess cried, 'Lord! they have left the window open in the next room ! ’—went to shut it, and shut the lovers in too, where they remained for three hours. The same night all the town was at the Duchess of Richmond’s. Lady Albemarle was at tredille ; the Duke of Bedford came up to the table, and told her he must speak to her as soon as the pool was over. You may guess whether she knew a card more that she played. When she had finished, the Duke told her he should wait on her the next morning, to make the demand in form. She told it directly to me and my niece Waldegrave, who was in such transport for her friend, that she promised the Duke of Bedford to kiss him, and hurried home directly to write to her sisters. The Duke asked no questions about fortune, but has since slipped a bit of paper into Lady Elizabeth’s hand, telling her he hoped his son would live, but if he did not, there was something for her ; it was a jointure of three thousand pounds a year, and six hundred pounds pin-money. I dined with her the next day at Monsieur de Guerchy’s, and as I hindered the company from wishing her joy, and yet joked with her myself, Madame de Guerchy said she perceived I would let nobody else tease her, that I might have all the teasing to myself. She has behaved in the prettiest manner in the world, and would not appear at a vast assembly at Northumberland House on Tuesday, nor at a great haymaking at Mrs. Pitt’s on Wednesday. Yesterday they all went to Woburn, and to-morrow the ceremony is to be performed ; for the Duke has not a moment’s patience till she is breeding.

You would have been diverted at Northumberland House ; besides the sumptuous liveries, the illuminations in the garden, the pages, the two chaplains in waiting in their gowns and scarves, à l’irlandaise, and Dr. Hill and his wife, there was a most delightful Countess, who has just imported herself from Mecklenburgh. She is an absolute

Princess of Monomotapa; but I fancy you have seen her, for her hideousness and frantic accoutrements are so extraordinary, that they tell us she was hissed in the Tuileries. She crossed the drawing-room on the Birthday to speak to the Queen en amie, after standing with her back to Princess Amalie. The Queen was so ashamed of her, that she said cleverly, 'This is not the dress at Strelitz; but this woman always dressed herself as capriciously there, as your Duchess of Queensberry does here.'

The haymaking at Wandsworth Hill did not succeed, from the excessive cold of the night; I proposed to bring one of the cocks into the great room, and make a bonfire. All the beauties were disappointed, and all the Macaronies afraid of getting the toothache.

The Guerchys are gone to Goodwood, and were to have been carried to Portsmouth, but Lord Egmont<sup>2</sup> refused to let the ambassador see the place. The Duke of Richmond was in a rage, and I do not know how it has ended, for the Duke of Bedford defends the refusal, and says they certainly would not let you see Brest. The Comte d'Ayen<sup>3</sup> is going a longer tour. He is liked here. The three great ambassadors danced at court—the Prince of Masserano they say well; he is extremely in fashion, and is a sensible, very good-humoured man, though his appearance is so deceitful. They have given me the honour of a bon mot, which, I assure you, does not belong to me, that I never saw a man so full of orders and disorders. He and his suite, and the Guerchys and theirs, are to dine here next week. Poor little Strawberry never thought of such fêtes. I did invite them to breakfast, but they confounded it, and understood that they were asked to dinner, so I must do as well as

<sup>2</sup> First Lord of the Admiralty.

<sup>3</sup> Probably Jean Paul François (1739–1824), Comte d'Ayen, son of the Duc de Noailles, whom he succeeded in 1793.

I can. Both the ambassadors are in love with my niece; therefore, I trust they will not have unsentimental stomachs.

Shall I trouble you with a little commission? It is to send me a book that I cannot get here, nor am I quite sure of the exact title, but it is called Origine des Mœurs, or something to that import. It is in three volumes, and has not been written above two or three years. Adieu, my dear Lord, from my fireside.

P.S. Do you know that Madame de Yertzin, the Mecklenburgh Countess, has had the honour of giving the King of Prussia a box of the ear?—I am sure he deserved it, if he could take liberties with such a chimpanzee. Colonel Elliot died on Thursday.

962. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, June 8, 1764.

I CAN give you but little satisfaction on the affairs of your family, after which you inquire. I have not seen your brother these three weeks. When I do, I will endeavour to find out the solution of the enigmas he has sent you. The caveat must, I conclude, come from the Torrianos<sup>1</sup>; but now, would you believe it, I do not know whether your sister is alive or not. As your brother Ned said nothing of any legacy to her, she or her heirs, I suppose, dispute James's will. As to the other point of Ned's children, I am almost as much in the dark. Nobody upon earth is less inquisitive than I am about private affairs that do not concern them: when I even hear them by chance, I forget them immediately. I must rub up my reminiscence for you, and recollect what I can. I think then, I have heard that there are broods No. 1 and 2. Leah and her offspring, LETTER 962.—<sup>1</sup> Mann's sister married a Mr. Torriano.

Walker & Co. & Co. P.S.

*Sir William Hamilton, K.B.
from a painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds, P.R.A.*

I think, were packed off into the desert, by the influence of Rachel, who remains in possession. She has had at least a son and daughter, which two, I believe, were all that lived past infancy. Your brother Gal used to apprehend that a marriage would be declared in order to legitimate the boy, but he died some years ago. The daughter is become so great a favourite, that that very circumstance will probably prevent any marriage, which would not benefit her; and the alliance with the house of Gainsborough flatters your brother enough, I think, to make him desirous of aggrandizing your nephew Horace. I look thither too, but not at all forgetting who must come before him. Your brother Ned, on James's death, talked to me very explicitly of all centering in Horace; and the very frankness with which he mentions his natural children to you, seems an earnest that he has no thoughts of providing for them but as natural children. I would therefore advise you to approve of his designs for them, and talk to him with the same easiness of them as he does.

Your red riband is certainly postponed. There was but one vacant, which was promised to General Draper, who, when he thought he felt the sword dubbing his shoulder, was told that my Lord Clive could not conquer the Indies a second time without being a Knight of the Bath. This, however, I think will be but a short parenthesis, for I expect that heaven-born hero<sup>2</sup> to return from whence he came, instead of bringing hither all the Mogul's pearls and rubies. Yet, before that happens there will probably be other vacancies to content both Draper and you.

You have a new neighbour coming to you, Mr. William Hamilton, one of the King's equerries, who succeeds Sir James Gray at Naples. Hamilton is a friend of mine, is son of Lady Archibald, and was aide-de-camp to Mr. Conway. He is picture-mad, and will ruin himself in virtù-land. His wife<sup>3</sup> is as musical as he is connoisseur, but she is dying of an asthma.

<sup>2</sup> Expression of Mr. Pitt, afterwards Lord Chatham, in the House of Commons on Lord Clive. Walpole.

I have never heard of the present<sup>4</sup> you mention of the box of essences. The secrets of that prison-house do not easily transpire, and the merit of any offering is generally assumed, I believe, by the officiating priests.

Lord Tavistock is to be married to-morrow to Lady Elizabeth Keppel, Lord Albemarle's sister.

I love to tell you an anecdote of any of our old acquaintance, and I have now a delightful one, relating, yet indirectly, to one of them. You know, to be sure, that Madame de Craon's daughter, Madame de Boufflers<sup>5</sup>, has the greatest power with King Stanislaus. Our old friend the Princess goes seldom to Luneville for this reason, not enduring to see her daughter on that throne which she so long filled with absolute empire. But Madame de Boufflers, who, from his Majesty's age, cannot occupy all the places in the palace that her mother filled, indemnifies herself with his Majesty's Chancellor. One day that she discovered half-way up her leg, the lively old monarch said, 'Regardez, quel joli petit pied, et la belle jambe! Mon Chancelier vous dira le reste.' You know this is the form when a King says a few words to his Parliament, and then refers them to his chancellor. I expect to hear a great deal soon of the Princess, for Mr. Churchill and my sister are going to settle at Nancy for some time. Adieu!

<sup>3</sup> Daughter and heiress of Hugh Barlow, of Lawrenny Hall, near Swansea; d. 1782.

<sup>4</sup> A present from Sir Horace, I believe, to the Queen. Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> Marie Françoise Catherine de Beauvau Craon (d. 1787), Marquise de Boufflers.

963. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Strawberry Hill, June 18, 1764.

I TRUST that you have thought I was dead, it is so long since you heard of me. In truth I had nothing to talk of but cold and hot weather, of rain and want of rain, subjects that have been our summer conversation for these twenty years. I am pleased that you was content with your pictures, and shall be glad if you have begotten ancestors out of them. You may tell your uncle Algernon<sup>1</sup> that I go to-morrow where he would not be ashamed to see me: as there are not many such spots at present, you and he will guess it is to Park Place.

Strawberry, whose glories perhaps verge towards their setting, has been more sumptuous to-day than ordinary, and banqueted their representative majesties of France and Spain. I had Monsieur and Madame de Guerchy, Mademoiselle de Nangis their daughter, two other French gentlemen, the Prince of Masserano, his brother and secretary, Lord March, George Selwyn, Mrs. Anne Pitt, and my niece Waldegrave. The refectory never was so crowded: nor have any foreigners been here before that comprehended Strawberry. Indeed, everything succeeded to a hair. A violent shower in the morning laid the dust, brightened the green, refreshed the roses, pinks, orange-flowers, and the blossoms with which the acacias are covered. A rich storm of thunder and lightning gave a dignity of colouring to the heavens; and the sun appeared enough to illuminate the landscape, without basking himself over it at his length. During dinner there were French horns and clarionets in the cloister, and after coffee I treated them with an English and to them a very new collation, a syllabub milked under the cows that were brought to the brow of the terrace. Thence they went to the printing house, and saw a new fashionable French song printed. They drank tea in the gallery, and at eight went away to Vauxhall.

They really seemed quite pleased with the place and the day; but I must tell you, the treasury of the abbey will feel it, for without magnificence, all was handsomely done. I must keep maigre—at least till the interdict is taken off from my convent. I have kings and queens, I hear, in my neighbourhood, but this is no royal foundation. Adieu!

Your poor beadsman,

THE ABBOT OF STRAWBERRY.

P.S. Mr. Bentley's<sup>2</sup> servile poem is rewarded with 160*l.* a year in the Post Office.

964. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Strawberry Hill, Monday night [July 2, 1764].

If my Lady Ailesbury does not think the little bull as handsome as Jupiter himself, I shall resent it. He is accompanied by seven bantams for the Infanta.

As Lord Frederick and Lord John<sup>1</sup> are gone to you this evening, I can tell you no politics but what they know. The Bedfords are certainly jealous of some negotiation being on foot between Lord Bute and Pitt, but I cannot find it is with any reason, though I do not desire to have them undeceived.

I sent your papers to Mr. Matthews the moment I got to town; he said he was very ill, but would transcribe them if he could.

Lord Bath has been dying, but is out of danger, and,

<sup>2</sup> This name is obliterated in the original so as to be almost illegible.

LETTER 964.—Not in C.; printed from original in possession of Sir

T. V. Lister.

<sup>1</sup> Lords Frederick Campbell and John Cavendish.

what I like more, Legge mends again. Your brother has sent me the Duke and Duchess of Berwick<sup>2</sup>, and what upon earth to do with them I don't know. They have the grace to call themselves Lirias here, yet they do not go to court, and say they are only come to see their relations. He looks like a cook, but does not seem to have parts enough for one. He had never heard that his great-grandmother married Mr. Godfrey; he told me to-day that she called herself Churchill, but that her family name was Marlborough. The Duchess of Liria, who is sister of the Duc of Alva, is a rational civil being, not at all handsome, but easy and genteel. They have more debts than dukedoms, though he is Duke of Veraguez too, and have crowded all their rich blood into la rue de Suffolk Street.

They talk of a match between Lord Middlesex and Lady Jane Stuart: in the meantime, Mr. Ellis is dying for her, and Lord Holland's young Macartney<sup>3</sup> very desirous of living by her.

The fashionable diversion in town is a conjurer. We had him last night at my Lady Harrington's. His tricks are ten times more dexterous than Sandwich's.

There was last night at Guerchy's a daughter of Lord Dillon<sup>4</sup>, just come out of a convent, who is to be the future Duchess of Norfolk. She has a fine person, and not at all a disagreeable face.

The Mecklenburgh Countess was there too, ten times

<sup>2</sup> Maria Teresa de Silva y Alvarez de Toledo (1716-1790), daughter of Manuel José de Silva by Maria Teresa Alvarez de Toledo, eleventh Duchess of Alva; m. (1738) James Francis Edward, third Duke of Berwick.

<sup>3</sup> George Macartney (1737-1806), of Lissanoure, Antrim; K.B., 1772; cr. (July 19, 1776) Baron Macartney of Lissanoure; cr. Earl Macartney, 1794; Envoy to St. Petersburg, 1764-66; Ambassador at St. Petersburg, 1767-68; Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1768-72; Governor of the Caribbean Islands, 1776-84; Governor of Madras, 1784-85; Ambassador to China, 1792-94. He was an intimate friend of Lord Holland's family. He married Lady Jane Stuart in 1768.

<sup>4</sup> Henry Dillon (d. 1787), eleventh Viscount Dillon. He had four daughters, none of whom, however, married the Duke of Norfolk.

more dirty, frowsy, extravagant, and mad than ever. Prince William has said, 'This is the worst sample we have had yet.' I begin to think he will not command the army.

My Lord Townshend and Charles had quarrelled lately. My Lady made a reconciling dinner for them, and all was made up. As soon as they parted, George wrote the most abusive letter in the world to Charles, and they are rather ill together again. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

965. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Strawberry Hill, July 16, 1764

MR. CHUTE says you are peremptory that you will not cast a look southwards. Do you know that in that case you will not set eyes on me the Lord knows when? My mind is pretty much fixed on going to Paris the beginning of September. I think I shall go, if it is only to scold my Lord and Lady Hertford for sending me their cousins, the Duke and Duchess of Berwick, who say they are come to see their relations. By their appearance, you would imagine they were come to beg money of their family. He has just the sort of capacity which you would expect in a Stuart engrafted on a Spaniard. He asked me which way he was to come to Twickenham? I told him through Kensington, to which I supposed his geography might reach.—He replied, 'Oh! du côté de la mer.' She, who is sister of the Duke of Alva, is a decent kind of a body—but they talk wicked French. I gave them a dinner here t'other day, with the Marquis of Jamaica, their only child, and a fat tutor, and the few Fitzroys I could amass at this season. They were very civil, and seemed much pleased. To-day they are gone to Blenheim by invitation.

I want to send you something from the Strawberry Press: tell me how I shall convey it. It is nothing less than the most curious book that ever yet set its foot in the world—I expect to hear you scream hither. If you don't, I shall be disappointed, for I have kept it as a most profound secret from you, till I was ready to surprise you with it—I knew your impatience, and would not let you have it piecemeal. It is the Life of the great philosopher, Lord Herbert, written by himself.—Now are you disappointed—well, read it—not the forty first pages, of which you will be sick—I will not anticipate it—but I will tell you the history. I found it a year ago at Lady Hertford's, to whom Lady Powis<sup>1</sup> had lent it. I took it up, and soon threw it down again, as the dullest thing I ever saw. She persuaded me to take it home. My Lady Waldegrave was here in all her grief—Gray and I read it to amuse her.—We could not get on for laughing and screaming. I begged to have it to print—Lord Powis, sensible of the extravagance, refused. I insisted—he persisted. I told my Lady Hertford, it was no matter, I would print it, I was determined. I sat down and wrote a flattering dedication to Lord Powis, which I knew he would swallow: he did, and gave up his ancestor. But this was not enough. I was resolved the world should not think I admired it seriously (though there are really fine passages in it, and good sense too)—I drew up an equivocal preface, in which you will discover my opinion, and sent it with the dedication. The Earl gulped down the one under the palliative of the other—and here you will have all. Pray take notice of the pedigree, of which I am exceedingly proud; observe how I have clearly arranged so involved a descent—one may boast of one's heraldry. I shall send you, too, Lady Temple's Poems. Pray keep both under lock and key, for there are but two hundred copies of Lord Herbert, and but one hundred of the Poems suffered to be printed.

LETTER 965.—<sup>1</sup> Barbara Antonia Herbert, Countess of Powis.

I am almost crying to find the glorious morsel of summer that we have had turned into just such a watery season as the last. Even my excess of verdure, which used to comfort me for everything, does not satisfy me now, as I live entirely alone. I am heartily tired of my large neighbourhood, who do not furnish me two or three rational beings at most, and the best of them have no vivacity. London, whither I go at least once a fortnight for a night, is a perfect desert. As the court is gone into a convent at Richmond, the town is more abandoned than ever. I cannot, as you do, bring myself to be content without variety, without events; my mind is always wanting new food; summer does not suit me—but I will grow old some time or other. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

966. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, July 16, 1764.

You must think me a brute to have been so long without taking any notice of your obliging offer of coming hither. The truth is, I have not been at all settled here for three days together: nay, nor do I know when I shall be. I go to-morrow into Sussex; in August into Yorkshire, and in September—into France. If, in any interval of these jaunts, I can be sure of remaining here a week, which I literally have not been this whole summer, I will certainly let you know, and will claim your promise.

Another reason for my writing now is, I want to know how I may send you Lord Herbert's Life, which I have just printed. Did I remember the favour you did me of asking for my own print? if I did not, it shall accompany this book. Adieu, dear Sir.

Yours most faithfully,

HOR. WALPOLE.

967. TO THE REV. HENRY ZOUCH.

SIR,

Arlington Street, July 21, 1764.

You will have heard of the severe attendance which we have had for this last week in the House of Commons. It will, I trust, have excused me to you for not having answered sooner your very kind letter. My books, I fear, have no merit over Mr. Harte's Gustavus, but by being much shorter. I read his work, and was sorry so much curious matter should be so ill and so tediously put together. His anecdotes are much more interesting than mine; luckily I was aware that mine were very trifling, and did not dwell upon them. To answer the demand, I am printing them with additions, but must wait a little for assistance and corrections to the two latter, as I have had for the former.

You are exceedingly obliging, Sir, to offer me one of your Fergussons<sup>1</sup>. I thank you for it, as I ought; but, in truth, I have more pictures than room to place them; both my houses are full, and I have even been thinking of getting rid of some I have. That this is no declension of your civility, Sir, you will see, when I gladly accept either of your medals of King Charles. I shall be proud to keep it as a mark of your friendship; but then I will undoubtedly rob you of but one.

I condole with you, Sir, for the loss of your friend and relation, as I heartily take my share in whatever concerns you. The great and unmerited kindness I have received from you will ever make me your most obliged, &c.

LETTER 967.—This letter is obviously misdated. Parliament was prorogued from April 19 of this year till Jan. 10, 1765. The letter was probably written in Jan. 1764.

<sup>1</sup> Probably William Fergusson, a Scotch painter of still life mentioned in Anecdotes of Painting, who flourished in the seventeenth century.

968. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Arlington Street, July 21, 1764.

I must never send you trifles; for you always make me real presents in return. The beauty of the coin surprises me. Mr. White must be rich, when such are his duplicates. I am acquainted with him, and have often intended to visit his collection, but it is one of those things one never does, because one always may. I give you a thousand thanks in return, and what are not worth more, my own print, Lord Herbert's Life (this is curious, though it costs me little), and some orange flowers. I wish you had mentioned the latter sooner; I have had an amazing profusion this year, and given them away to the right and left by handfuls. These are all I could collect to-day, as I was coming to town, but you shall have more, if you want them.

I consign these things as you ordered. I wish the print may arrive without being rumpled; it is difficult to convey mezzotintos: but if this is spoiled, you shall have another.

If I make any stay in France, which I do not think I shall, above six weeks at most, you shall certainly hear from me—but I am a bad commissioner for searching you out a hermitage<sup>1</sup>. It is too much against my interest, and I had much rather find you one in the neighbourhood of Strawberry. Adieu! dear Sir.

Yours most sincerely,

H. WALPOLE.

969. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, July 27, 1764.

I KNOW nothing. This is both my text and my discourse: very entertaining matter for a letter! Yet I must write to keep up our acquaintance, and to acknowledge your last. You tell me you are disappointed of the Duke of York's return to Florence. Consolati, you will save a little money and more health; two hoards in which you do not too much abound, my dear Sir; and though they are not much more durable enjoyments than honour, they are somewhat more comfortable. I believe my Lady Temple<sup>1</sup> would at this moment be heartily glad to swop situations with you. Princess Amelia is at Stow, where Lady Temple, Sir Richard Lyttelton, and the Duchess of Bridgwater are all wheeled into the room in gouty chairs.

LETTER 968.—<sup>1</sup> Cole had serious thoughts of settling in France.

It was your brother Torriano, as I guessed, as you tell me, and as I have since heard, that put in the caveat, but soon withdrew it. My information was not quite so authentic about your elder brother's progeny; besides the infant, he has a son three years old.

They talk now of our Parliament meeting in November, which is so much sooner than I expected that perhaps it may prevent my journey to Paris. In the meantime I am going to the Duke of Devonshire's and Lord Strafford's, and design to know my own mind by the time I return.

Well now, can one honestly call this a letter? Can one have less to say when one has nothing to say? Don't think I am gulping and suppressing politics; they are dead asleep. Their réveil perhaps will make some noise. Oh! I had forgot D'Éon: they would not allow him time for witnesses, and so he would not plead, and so he was found guilty, and so his sentence cannot be pronounced till next term, which is not till November, and so I suppose he will go off by October; and so, if you and the post would excuse me, I would finish my letter. Monsieur de Guerchy is gone for the summer months. We do not quite believe he will return, as his sojourn here has been but unpleasant. He is an agreeable gentleman-like sort of body, no genius; but so much the better. It is well for us they had no abler to send. Yet he is a match for those he has to treat with.

LETTER 969.—<sup>1</sup> Anne Chamber, wife of Richard Grenville, first Earl Temple. Walpole.

Poland seems to be the only busy spot upon the globe at present. I was very well acquainted with Czartoriski, their king<sup>2</sup> that is to be, when he was here. He was a sensible young man, and spoke English very tolerably. Mr. Conway was more intimate with him, and still more so with Poniatowski, his cousin and friend. Yet I do not believe my cousin and friend<sup>3</sup> will go and offer his services to them against General Branicki<sup>4</sup>, though so ill-treated at home. Adieu, my dear Sir.

970. TO GROSVENOR BEDFORD.

DEAR SIR,

July 30, 1764.

I did not know that the watch-coats were bought of Mr. Mann. I should be very glad to oblige Mr. Jackson, and will in anything else; but I don't see how I can deal with anybody else, as Mr. Edward Mann and his family continue the business, and I have such connections with them. I could wish you had not thought of this, as I would fain oblige Mr. Jackson, and yet I cannot do anything—the Manns would take it ill.

I enclose the warrant, and a ticket for Strawberry; and three advertisements, which, at your leisure as you go into the City, I will beg you to inquire after, and if their cases are really compassionate, to give half a guinea for me to each, and to send a guinea to the common side of the Fleet

<sup>2</sup> Czartoriski was not chosen king, but Poniatowski, by the name of Stanislaus II. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> General Conway. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> Another competitor for the crown. Walpole.—He took arms to oppose Poniatowski's election, was defeated, and fled to Turkey.

Prison, where they advertise their sickness,—but don't mention me.

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

971. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 3, 1764.

As my letters are seldom proper for the post now, I begin them at any time, and am forced to trust to chance for a conveyance. This difficulty renders my news very stale; but what can I do? There does not happen enough at this season of the year to fill a mere gazette. I should be more sorry to have you think me silent too long. You must be so good as to recollect, when there is a large interval between my letters, that I have certainly one ready in my writing-box, and only wait for a messenger. I hope to send this by Lord Coventry. For the next three weeks, indeed, I shall not be able to write, as I go in a few days with your brother to Chatsworth and Wentworth Castle.

I am under more distress about my visit to you—but I will tell you the truth. As I think the Parliament will not meet before Christmas, though they now talk of it for November, I would quit our politics for a few weeks; but the expense frightens me, which did not use to be one of my fears. I cannot but expect, knowing the enemies I have, that the Treasury may distress me. I had laid by a little sum which I intended to bauble away at Paris; but I may have very serious occasion for it. The recent example of Lord Holderness, who has had every rag seized at the Custom House, alarms my present prudence. I cannot afford to buy even clothes, which I may lose in six weeks. These considerations dispose me to wait till I see a little farther into this chaos. You know enough of the present actors in the political drama, to believe that the present system is not a permanent one, nor likely to roll on till Christmas without some change. The first moment that I can quit party with honour, I shall seize. It neither suits my inclination nor the years I have lived in the world; for, though I am not old, I have been in the world so long, and seen so much of those who figure in it, that I am heartily sick of its commerce. My attachment to your brother, and the apprehension that fear of my own interest would be thought the cause if I took no part for him, determined me to risk everything rather than abandon him. I have done it, and cannot repent, whatever distresses may follow. One's good name is of more consequence than all the rest, my dear Lord. Do not think I say this with the least disrespect to you; it is only to convince you that I did not recommend anything to you that I would avoid myself; nor engaged myself, nor wished to engage you, in party from pique, resentment, caprice, or choice. I am dipped in it much against my inclination. I can suffer by it infinitely more than you could. But there are moments when one must take one's part like a man. This I speak solely with regard to myself. I allow fairly and honestly, that you was not circumstanced as I was. You had not voted with your brother as I did; the world knew your inclinations were different. All this certainly composed serious reasons for you not to follow him, if you did not choose it. My motives for thinking you had better have espoused his cause were for your own sake: I detailed those motives to you in my last long letter: that opinion is as strong with me as ever.

The affront to you, the malice that aimed that affront, the importance that it gives one, upon the long run, to act steadily and uniformly with one's friends, the enemies you make in the opposition, composed of so many great families, and of your own principal allies, and the little merit you gain with the ministry by the contrary conduct,—all these were, to me, unanswerable reasons, and remain so, for what I advised; yet, as I told you before, I think the season is passed, and that you must wait for an opportunity of disengaging yourself with credit. I am persuaded that occasion will be given you, from one or other of the causes I mentioned in my last; and if the fairest is, I entreat you by the good wishes which I am sure you know from my soul I bear you, to seize it. Excuse me: I know I go too far, but my heart is set on your making a great figure, and your letters are so kind, that they encourage me to speak with a friendship which I am sensible is not discreet—but you know you and your brother have ever been the objects of my warmest affection; and, however partial you may think me to him, I must labour to have the world think as highly of you, and to unite you firmly for your lives. If this was not my motive, you must be sure I should not be so earnest. It is not one vote in the House of Lords that imports us. Party is grown so serious, and will, I doubt, become every day more so, that one must make one's option; and it will go to my soul to see you embarked against all your friends, against the Whig principles you have ever professed, and with men, amongst whom you have not one well-wisher, and with whom you will not even be able to remain upon tolerable terms, unless you take a vigorous part against all you love and esteem.

In warm times lukewarmness is a crime with those on whose side you are ranged. Your good sense and experience will judge whether what I say is not strictly the case. It is not your brother or I that have occasioned these circumstances. Lord Bute has thrown this country into a confusion which will not easily be dissipated without serious hours. Changes may, and, as I said in the beginning of my letter, will probably happen; but the seeds that have been sown will not be rooted up by one or two revolutions in the cabinet. It had taken an hundred and fifty years to quiet the animosities of Whig and Tory; that contest is again set on foot, and though a struggle for places may be now, as has often been, the secret purpose of principals, the court and the nation are engaging on much deeper springs of action. I wish I could elucidate this truth, as I have the rest, but that is not fit for paper, nor to be comprised within the compass of a letter—I have said enough to furnish you with ample reflections. I submit all to your own judgement—I have even acted rightly by you, in laying before you what it was not easy for you, my dear Lord, to see or know at a distance. I trust all to your indulgence, and your acquaintance with my character, which surely is not artful or mysterious, and which, to you, has ever been, as it ever shall be, most cordial and well intentioned. I come to my gazette.

There is nothing new, but the resignation of Lord Carnarvon<sup>1</sup>, who has thrown up the Bedchamber, and they say, the lieutenancy of Hampshire, on Stanley being made governor of the Isle of Wight.

I have been much distressed this morning. The royal family reside chiefly at Richmond, whither scarce necessary servants attend them, and no mortal else but Lord Bute. The King and Queen have taken to going about to see places; they have been at Oatlands and Wanstead. A quarter before ten to-day, I heard the bell at the gate ring,—truth is, I was not up, for my hours are not reformed, either at night or in the morning,—I inquired who it was? the Prince of Mecklenburgh and De Witz had called to know if they could see the house; my two Swiss, Favre and Louis, told them I was in bed, but if they would call again in an hour, they might see it. I shuddered at this report,—and would it were the worst part! The Queen herself was behind, in a coach: I am shocked to death, and know not what to do! It is ten times worse just now than ever at any other time: it will certainly be said that I refused to let the Queen see my house. See what it is to have republican servants! When I made a tempest about it, Favre said, with the utmost sang-froid, ‘Why could not he tell me he was the Prince of Mecklenburgh?’ I shall go this evening and consult my oracle, Lady Suffolk. If she approves it, I will write to De Witz, and pretend I know nothing of anybody but the Prince, and beg a thousand pardons, and assure him how proud I should be to have his master visit my castle at Thundertentronk.

LETTER 971.—<sup>1</sup> James Brydges eldest son of second Duke of Chandos, (1731–1789), Marquis of Carnarvon, whom he succeeded in 1771.

August 4th.

I have dined to-day at Claremont, where I little thought I should dine, but whither our affairs have pretty naturally conducted me. It turned out a very melancholy day. Before I got into the house, I heard that letters were just arrived there, with accounts of the Duke of Devonshire having had two more fits. When I came to see Lord John’s and Lord Frederick’s letters, I found these two fits had been but one, and that very slight, much less than the former, and certainly nervous by all the symptoms, as Sir Edward Wilmot, who has been at Chatsworth, pronounces it. The Duke perceived it coming, and directed what to have done, and it was over in four minutes. The next event was much more real. I had been half round the garden with the Duke<sup>2</sup> in his one-horse chair; we were passing to the other side of the house, when George

<sup>2</sup> Of Newcastle.

Onslow<sup>3</sup> met us, arrived on purpose to advertise the Duke of the sudden death of the Duchess of Leeds<sup>4</sup>, who expired yesterday at dinner in a moment: he called it apoplectic; but as the Bishop of Oxford<sup>5</sup>, who is at Claremont, concluded, it was the gout flown up into the head. The Duke received the news as men do at seventy-one: but the terrible part was to break it to the Duchess, who is ill. George Onslow would have taken me away to dinner with him, but the Duke thought that would alarm the Duchess too abruptly, and she is not to know it yet: with her very low spirits it is likely to make a deep impression. It is a heavy stroke too for her father, poor old Lord Godolphin<sup>6</sup>, who is eighty-six. For the Duke, his spirits, under so many mortifications and calamities, are surprising: the only effect they and his years seem to have made on him is to have abated his ridicules. Our first meeting to be sure was awkward, yet I never saw a man conduct anything with more sense than he did. There were no notices of what is passed; nothing fulsome, no ceremony, civility enough, confidence enough, and the greatest ease. You would only have thought that I had been long abroad, and was treated like an old friend's son with whom he might make free. In truth, I never saw more rational behaviour: I expected a great deal of flattery, but we had nothing but business while we were alone, and common conversation while the Bishop and the chaplain were present. The Duke mentioned to me his having heard Lord Holland's inclination to your embassy. He spoke very obligingly of you, and said that, next to his own children, he believed there was nobody the late Lord Hardwicke loved so much

<sup>3</sup> George, afterwards Earl, Onslow. He was nephew by marriage to the Duke of Newcastle.

<sup>4</sup> Sister of the Duchess of Newcastle.

<sup>5</sup> John Hume, translated to Salisbury in 1766; d. 1782.

<sup>6</sup> Francis Godolphin (1678-1766), second Earl of Godolphin.

as you. I cannot say the Duke spoke very affectionately of Sir Joseph Yorke, who has never written a single line to him since he was out. I told him that did not surprise me, for Sir Joseph has treated your brother in the same manner, though the latter has written two letters to him since his dismissal.

Arlington Street, Tuesday night, 10 o'clock.

I am here alone in the most desolate of all towns. I came to-day to visit my sovereign Duchess<sup>7</sup> in her lying-in, and have been there till this moment, not a soul else but Lady Jane Scott. Lady Waldegrave came from Tunbridge yesterday en passant, and reported a new woful history of a fracas there—don't my Lady Hertford's ears tingle? but she will not be surprised. A footman—a very comely footman—to a Mrs. Craster, had been most extremely impertinent to Lord Clanbrazil, Frederick Vane, and a son of Lady Anne Hope<sup>8</sup>; they threatened to have him turned away—he replied, if he was, he knew where he should be protected. Tunbridge is a quiet private place, where one does not imagine that everything one does in one's private family will be known—yet so it happened that the morning after the fellow's dismissal, it was reported that he was hired by another lady<sup>9</sup>, the Lord knows who. At night, that lady was playing at loo in the rooms. Lord Clanbrazil told her of the report, and hoped she would contradict it: she grew as angry as a fine lady could grow, told him it was no business of his, and—and I am afraid, still more. Vane whispered her—one should have thought that name<sup>10</sup> would

<sup>7</sup> The Duchess of Grafton, whose youngest son, Lord Charles Fitzroy, was born on July 17, 1764.

<sup>8</sup> Lady Anne Vane (d. 1775), eldest daughter of first Earl of Darlington; m. (1) (1746) Hon. Charles Hope Weir, second son of first Earl of Hopetoun, from whom she was divorced; (2) Hon. George Monson.

<sup>9</sup> Probably Lady Harrington; she was the sister of Lady Hertford.

<sup>10</sup> Henry Vane, Lord Barnard, had been one of Lady Harrington's admirers. See vol. iii. p. 389.

have had some weight—oh! worse and worse! the English language was ransacked for terms that came to her resentment—the party broke up, and, I suppose, nobody went home to write an account of what happened to their acquaintance.

O'Brien and Lady Susan are to be transported to Ohio, and have a grant of forty thousand acres. The Duchess of Grafton says sixty thousand were bestowed on a friend of yours, and a relation of Lady Susan, and away twenty thousand for a Mr. Upton<sup>11</sup>.

By a letter from your brother to-day, I find our new journey is laid aside; the Duke of Devonshire is still in town; the physicians want him to go to Spa. His derangement makes me turn my eyes eagerly to Paris; though I shall be ashamed to come thither for the wise reasons I have given you against it in the beginning of this letter; nous verrons—the temptation is strong. Patriots must resist temptations; it is not the etiquette to yield to them till a change happens.

I enclose a letter, which your brother has sent me to convey to you, and two pamphlets<sup>12</sup>. The former is to be written by Shebbeare, under George Grey's direction: the latter, which makes rather more noise, is certainly composed by somebody who does not have your brother—I even fancy you will guess the same person for the author that everybody else does. I shall be glad to send you soon another pamphlet, written by Charles Darnley, on the subject of the warrants—you see, as yet we do not ransack Newgate and the pillory for writers, but leave those to the administration.

I wish you would be so kind as to tell me what has become of my sister and Mr. Churchill. I received from Lady Mary to-day, telling me she was that instant setting out from Paris, but does not say whither.

<sup>11</sup> Clotworthy Upton (1721–1785), created Baron Templetown in 1776.

<sup>12</sup> An Address to the Public on a

Late Dismission, and a Conduct, the latter by Horace Walpole.

The first storm that is likely to burst in politics seems to be threatened from the Bedford quarter. The Duke and Duchess have been in town but for two days the whole summer, and are now going to Trentham, whither Lord Gower, qui se donnait pour favori, is retired for three months. This is very unlike the declaration in spring, that the Duke must reside at Streatham<sup>13</sup>, because the King could not spare him for a day.

The memorial<sup>14</sup> left by Guerehy at his departure, and the late arrêts in France on our American histories, make much noise, and seem to say that I have not been a false prophet! If our ministers can stand so many difficulties from abroad, and so much odium at home, they are abler men than I take them for. Adieu, the whole Hôtel de Lassay<sup>15</sup>! I verily think I shall see it soon.

972. TO CHRISTOPHER WREN.

SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 9, 1764.

You do me justice in believing that I should receive any information from you with pleasure, and should be ready to give you any proper satisfaction that depends on me with regard to that great man your grandfather. If I had not supposed, Sir, that you had exhausted the subject in that agreeable and instructive work the Parentalia<sup>1</sup>, I should have taken the liberty of consulting you on the Life of

<sup>13</sup> The Duke's house at Streatham formerly belonged to his grandfather, John Howland.

<sup>14</sup> A demand for restitution of property of the Duchy of Brittany, taken away from Belleisle.

<sup>15</sup> Lord Hertford's house in Paris.

LETTER 972. — Not in C.; now printed from original in possession of Mrs. Alfred Morrison.

<sup>1</sup> Parentalia, or Memoirs of the Family of the Wrens . . . but chiefly of Sir Christopher Wren, &c., compiled by his son Christopher, and published by his grandson Stephen, 'with the care of Joseph Ames' (London, 1750).

Sir Christopher Wren. I have already apologized in my Anecdotes for attempting an account of him, as I could add nothing to what has already been written on this article.

When I began your letter, Sir, I own I was alarmed. The caution I have used on modern artists, lest I should give a moment's pain to their families, is evident. It has occasioned the latter volumes of my work being more dry, and perhaps less amusing than the former. It has even made me stop before I had completed my plan, because, to say the truth, there are exceedingly few of the latter painters on whom it is possible to bestow just panegyric, and I cannot sacrifice my veracity in compliment to their descendants. But when I had finished your letter, my apprehension was in great measure removed, as the little I have said in dispraise of Sir Christopher cannot, I think, Sir, reasonably give you any uneasiness.

I have said in my book, where I certainly did not mean to flatter him or you, that he was a genius. I have not said, nor can say consistently with truth, that he was faultless. Methinks even the few objections I have made to him confirm the encomiums. A general panegyric always poses for such, and does no honour to the person extolled. Criticism mixed with approbation is apt to make both appear sincere, though the former may not be just. My criticisms on Sir Christopher are given, and could not be given otherwise, but as matters of opinion. I am no standard of judgement. The sole questions on the articles of taste will be whether Sir Christopher or I know best what taste is. Weigh so inconsiderable a judgement as mine, Sir, against Sir Christopher's, and you will soon be easy on that head.

You say, Sir, that it appears a paradox to you that a great genius should want true taste. Give me leave to differ with you, and to give you my reasons. So far from being a paradox, the one almost appears to me a consequence of the other. I will not defend myself on the distinction I might fairly make, that Sir Christopher Wren was a genius in some respects and wanted taste in others, which yet I presume is all I have said in effect; but it seems to me as if there was a sobriety in taste which would be a shackle on a genius. That there has been now and then a genius (for genius itself is a curiosity) without taste, and often taste without genius, is evident from example. One of the greatest geniuses that ever existed, Shakespeare, undoubtedly wanted taste. In the very class which is the subject of this letter—I mean architecture—Inigo Jones seems to me to have had more taste than genius. Genius is original, invents, and taste selects, perhaps copies, with judgement. If I am right, have I wronged your ancestor?

You impute to King William, Sir, the want of taste in Hampton Court—you therefore allow there was want of taste. Was I to blame when observing that want of taste? I imputed it to the architect. You will perhaps urge the same plea for the palace at Winchester<sup>2</sup>. Forgive me if I say that to prove Sir Christopher had a taste for erecting palaces equal to what he had for churches, some building ought to be specified in which he has exerted it. A prince may name some general style of building to his architect, but does not draw the design; and even if his choice is vicious, if the architect has taste he will exert it, even in an injudicious style. The truth is the fault was in the age, and to that I have already imputed it, not to your grandfather. I shall, however, Sir, on your information, do justice to Sir Christopher, as I should be glad to do it if I was authorized, in what I have heard, that he gave two other designs for St. Paul's preferable even to what is executed, but which were rejected by the Duchess of Portsmouth's influence for interested reasons. I say I will mention the fact of a superior plan for Hampton Court.

<sup>2</sup> Charles II's palace at Winchester.

With regard to the tower of St. Dunstan's<sup>3</sup>, I cannot at this moment resolve you from what book I took my authority—whether from any of those I have quoted, or from the printed table of Sir Christopher's designs for churches. If I can find, or you can give me, Sir, any authority for contradicting it, I shall be most ready to satisfy you, as I certainly will in all facts you disprove, and in matters of opinion if you convince me. You have too good sense, Sir, to expect or require that I should unsay what I have said, for no reason but to pay a compliment to Sir Christopher's memory, which would do him no honour, and would make me ridiculous.

The church at Warwick<sup>4</sup> shall certainly no longer be imputed to him by me.

As I mean in my next edition to do justice to Sir Christopher where it is due, I must here, Sir, do justice to Vertue, whose merit in the Anecdotes is real, while mine is only trifling and ornamental. The story of your grandfather being carried every year to St. Paul's came not from Vertue, but from my having heard it often. It appeared very natural, and certainly cannot convey an idea of the smallest imputation. Would any man living have wondered if Milton had had his Paradise Lost read over to him every year?

I flatter myself, Sir, I have restored myself to your favour. It would vex me to have to disoblige you undesignedly; but consider, Sir, how hardly an author would be circumstanced if he was prohibited from speaking his opinion on public works lest it should offend the descendants of the poets, architects, painters, &c., in question. Every public character—and such is an architect—is liable to be criticized. Nobody has been more censured than my own father; with all the veneration I feel for his memory I never thought him perfect. You, Sir, justly hold Sir Christopher's talent for architecture far inferior to his other qualifications—while his moral virtues remain unblemished you will not, I am sure, think, Sir, that it is of any consequence whether Hampton Court and Winchester are executed in the best taste or not.

<sup>3</sup> St. Dunstan-in-the-East. The tower was designed by Wren.

<sup>4</sup> St. Mary's; the tower only was designed by Wren.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

973. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 13, 1764.

I AM afraid it is some thousands of days since I wrote to you; but woe is me! how could I help it? Summer will be summer, and peace peace. It is not the fashion to be married, or die in the former, nor to kill or be killed in the latter; and pray recollect if those are not the sources of correspondence. You may perhaps put in a caveat against my plea of peace, and quote Turks Island<sup>1</sup> upon me; why, to be sure the parenthesis is a little hostile, but we are like a good wife, and can wink at what we don't like to see; besides, the French, like a sensible husband that has made a slip, have promised us a new top-knot, so we have kissed and are very good friends.

The Duke of York returned very abruptly. The town talks of remittances stopped; but as I know nothing of the matter, and you are not only a minister but have the honour of his good graces, I do not pretend to tell you what to be sure you know better than I do.

LETTER 973.—<sup>1</sup> Which had been seized and taken from us. Walpole.—

Taken by D'Estaing, but subsequently restored.

Old Sir John Barnard<sup>2</sup> is dead, which he had been to the world for some time; and Mr. Legge<sup>3</sup>. The latter, who was heartily in the minority, said cheerfully just before he died, 'that he was going to the majority.'

Let us talk a little of the north. Count Poniatowski, with whom I was acquainted when he was here, is King of Poland, and calls himself Stanislaus the Second. This is the sole instance, I believe, upon record, of a second of a name being on the throne while the first was living without having contributed to dethrone him. Old Stanislaus lives to see a line of successors, like Macbeth in the cave of the witches. So much for Poland; don't let us go farther north; we shall find there Alecto herself. I have almost wept for poor Ivan<sup>4</sup>! I shall soon begin to believe that Richard III<sup>5</sup> murdered as many folks as the Lancastrian historians say he did. I expect that this Fury will poison her son next, lest Semiramis should have the bloody honour of having been more unnatural. As Voltaire has unpoisoned so many persons of former ages, methinks he ought to do as much for the present time, and assure posterity that there never was such a lamb as Catherine II, and that, so far from assassinating her own husband and Czar Ivan, she wept over every chicken that she had for dinner. How crimes, like fashions, flit from clime to clime! Murder reigns under the Pole, while you, who are in the very town where Catherine de' Medici was born, and within a stone's-throw

<sup>2</sup> Formerly Lord Mayor of London, and one of the chiefs of the opposition to Sir R. Walpole. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Henry Bilson Legge; he had been Chancellor of the Exchequer. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> The deposed Czar Ivan, attempting to make his escape, had been murdered; but it is very doubtful whether the Czarina could be privy to his death. Walpole.—He was killed by his guards, on an attempt being made to rescue him.

<sup>5</sup> Mr. Walpole afterwards published his Historic Doubts on that subject. Walpole.

of Rome, where Borgia and his holy father<sup>6</sup> sent cardinals to the other world by hecatombs, are surprised to hear that there is such an instrument as a stiletto. The papal is now a mere gouty chair, and the good old souls don't even waddle out of it to get a bastard.

Well, good night! I have no more monarchs to chat over; all the rest are the most Catholic or most Christian, or most something or other that is divine; and you know one can never talk long about folks that are only excellent. One can say no more about Stanislaus the first than that he is the best of beings. I mean, unless they do not deserve it, and then their flatterers can hold forth upon their virtues by the hour.

974. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, Aug. 16, 1764.

I AM not gone north, so pray write to me. I am not going south, so pray come to me. The Duke of Devonshire's journey to Spa has prevented the first, and twenty reasons the second; whenever, therefore, you are disposed to make a visit to Strawberry, it will rejoice to receive you in its old ruffs and fardingales, and without rouge, blonde, and run silks.

You have not said a word to me, ingrate as you are, about Lord Herbert—does not he deserve one line?

Tell me when I shall see you, that I may make no appointments to interfere with it. Mr. Conway, Lady Ailesbury, and Lady Lyttelton have been at Strawberry with me for four or five days, so I am come to town to have my house washed, for you know I am a very Hollander in point of cleanliness. This town is a deplorable solitude; one meets nothing but Mrs. Holman, like the pelican in the wilderness. Adieu!

<sup>6</sup> Roderigo Borgia, Pope under the name of Alexander VI, and father of Cesare Borgia.

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

975. TO VISCOUNT NUNEHAM.

MY LORD,

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 21, 1764.

When you talk of obligations, what does your Lordship leave to me to say? and when you make apologies, what can I make but excuses for having given you the trouble of writing at all, which I assuredly did not expect?

I rejoice Lord Herbert has diverted you; I own it appears to me the most singular book that ever was written. I am overpaid if it has answered my purpose in amusing you.

As your Lordship is not particularly fond of the country, I would condole with you on its being more disagreeable than common by the continual rains, but I am so selfish as to hope that your having been detained much in the house has contributed to the employment of your graver. Your friends gain so much by that that you must forgive their wishing you constantly engaged.

I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's

Most obedient and

Most obliged humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

976. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 27, 1764.

I HOPE you received safe a parcel and a very long letter that I sent you, above a fortnight ago, by Mr. Strange the engraver. Scarce anything has happened since worth repeating, but what you know already, the death of poor Legge, and the seizure of Turk Island: the latter event very consonant to all my ideas. It makes much noise here, especially in the city, where the ministry grow every day more and more unpopular. Indeed, I think there is not much probability of their standing their ground, even till Christmas. Several defections are already known, and others are ripe which they do not apprehend.

LETTER 975.—Not in C.; reprinted from Harcourt Papers, vol. viii. pp. 92-3.

Doctor Hunter, I conclude, has sent you Charles Townshend's pamphlet<sup>1</sup>: it is well written, but does not sell much, as a notion prevails that it has been much altered and softened.

The Duke of Devonshire is gone to Spa; he was stopped for a week by a rash, which those who wished it so called a miliary fever, but was so far from it, that if he does not find immediate benefit from Spa, he is to go to Aix-la-Chapelle, in hopes that the warm baths will supple his skin, and promote another eruption.

I have been this evening to Sion, which is becoming another Mount Palatine. Adam has displayed great taste, and the Earl matches it with magnificence. The gallery is converting into a museum in the style of a columbarium, according to an idea that I proposed to my Lord Northumberland. Mr. Bouldby and Lady Mary<sup>2</sup> are there, and the Primate, who looks old and broken enough to aspire to the papacy. Lord Holland, I hear, advises what Lord Bute much wishes, the removal of George Grenville, to make room for Lord Northumberland at the head of the Treasury. The Duchess of Grafton is gone to her father. I wish you may hear no more of this journey! If you should, this time, the complaints will come from her side.

LETTER 976.—<sup>1</sup> A Defence of the Ministry in the House of Commons on the Question relating to General Warrants.

<sup>2</sup> Lady Mary Brudenell, eldest daughter of third Earl of Cardigan; m. (1) Richard Powis, of Hintlesham, Suffolk; (2) Thomas Bowlby.

You have got the sposo Coventry with you, have not you? And you are going to have the Duke of York. You will not want such a nobody as me. When I have a good opportunity, I will tell you some very sensible advice that has been given me on that head, which I am sure you will approve.

It is well for me I am not a Russian. I should certainly be knouted. The murder of the young Czar Ivan has sluiced again all my abhorrence of the Czarina. What a devil in a diadem! I wonder they can spare such a principal performer from hell!

September 9th.

I had left this letter unfinished, from want of common materials, if I should send it by the post; and from want of private conveyance, if I said more than was fit for the post. But being just returned from Park Place, where I have been for three days, I not only find your extremely kind letter of August 21st, but a card from Madame de Chabot, who tells me she sets out for Paris in a day or two, and offers to carry a letter to you, which gives me the opportunity I wished for.

I must begin with what you conclude—your most friendly offer, if I should be distressed by the Treasury. I can never thank you enough for this, nor the tender manner in which you clothe it; though, believe me, my dear Lord, I could never blush to be obliged to you. In truth, though I do not doubt their disposition to hurt me, I have had prudence enough to make it much longer than their reign can last, before it could be in their power to make me feel want. With all my extravagance, I am much beforehand, and having perfected and paid for what I wished to do here, my common expenses are trifling, and nobody can live more frugally than I, when I have a mind to it. What I said of fearing temptations at Paris, was barely serious: I thought it imprudent, just now, to throw away my money ; but that consideration, singly, would not keep me here. I am eager to be with you, and my chief reason for delaying is, that I wish to make a longer stay than I could just now. The advice I hinted at, in the former part of this letter, was Lady Suffolk's, and I am sure you will think it very sensible. She told me, should I now go to Paris, all the world would say I went to try to persuade you to resign ; that even the report would be impertinent to you, to whom she knew and saw I wished so well ; and that when I should return, it would be said I had failed in my errand. Added to this, which was surely very prudent and friendly advice, I will own to you fairly, that I think I shall soon have it in my power to come to you on the foot I wish,—I mean, having done with politics, which I have told you all along, and with great truth, are as much my abhorrence as yours. I think this administration cannot last till Christmas, and I believe they themselves think so. I am cautious when I say this, because I promise you faithfully, the last thing I will do shall be to give you any false lights knowingly. I am clear, I repeat it, against your resigning now ; and there is no meaning in all I have taken the liberty to say to you, and which you receive with so much goodness and sense, but to put you on your guard in such ticklish times, and to pave imperceptibly to the world the way to your reunion with your friends. In your brother, I am persuaded, you will never find any alteration ; and whenever you find an opportunity proper, his credit with particular persons will remove any coldness that may have happened. I admire the force and reasoning with which you have stated your own situation ; and I think there are but two points in which we differ at all. I do not see how your brother could avoid the part he chose. It was the administration that made it decisive—no inclination of his. The other is a trifle ; it regards Elliot<sup>3</sup>, nor is it my opinion alone that he is at Paris on business: everybody believes it, and considering his abilities, and the present difficulties of Lord Bute, Elliot's absence would be very extraordinary, if merely occasioned by idleness or amusement, or even to place his children, when it lasts so long.

The affair of Turk Island, and the late promotion of Colonel Fletcher<sup>4</sup> over thirty-seven older officers, are the chief causes, added to the Canada bills<sup>5</sup>, logwood<sup>6</sup> and the Manilla affairs<sup>7</sup>, which have ripened our heats to such a height. Lord Mansfield's violence against the press has contributed much—but the great distress of all to the ministers, is the behaviour of the Duke of Bedford, who has twice or thrice peremptorily refused to attend council. He has been at Trentham, and crossed the country back to Woburn, without coming to town. Lord Gower has been in town but one day. Many causes are assigned for all this; the refusal of making Lord Waldegrave of the Bedchamber; Lord Tavistock's inclination to the minority; and above all, a reversion, which it is believed Lord Bute has been so weak as to obtain, of Amptill, a royal grant, in which the Duke has but sixteen years to come. You know enough of that court, to know that, in the article of Bedfordshire, no influence has any weight with his Grace. At present, indeed, I believe little is tried. The Duchess and Lady Bute are as hostile as possible. Rigby's journey convinces me of what I have long

<sup>3</sup> Gilbert (afterwards Sir Gilbert) Elliot; he was an adherent of Lord Bute. His visit was probably connected with the placing of his two sons, Gilbert (afterwards Earl of Minto) and Hugh, at the Pension Militaire of Fontainebleau.

<sup>4</sup> Lieutenant-Colonel (afterwards General) Henry Fletcher, promoted to command the 35th Regiment.

<sup>5</sup> Payment of these was refused by the French Government, except upon terms very disadvantageous to the English merchants.

<sup>6</sup> The Spaniards had ill-treated the English logwood-cutters in Honduras.

<sup>7</sup> The Spanish ministers refused payment of bills upon the Spanish Treasury which had been given to secure Manilla from plunder. The money was never paid.

suspected, that his reign is at an end. I have even heard, though I am far from trusting to the quarter from which I had my intelligence, that the Duke has been making overtures to Mr. Pitt, which have not been received unfavourably; I shall know more of this soon, as I am to go to Stowe in three or four days. Mr. Pitt is exceedingly well disposed to your brother, talks highly of him, and of the injustice done to him, and they are to meet on the first convenient opportunity. Thus much for politics, which, however, I cannot quit, without again telling you how sensible I am of all your goodness and friendly offers.

The court, independent of politics, makes a strange figure. The recluse life led here at Richmond, which is carried to such an excess of privacy and economy, that the Queen's friseur waits on them at dinner, and that four pounds only of beef are allowed for their soup, disgusts all sorts of people. The Drawing-rooms are abandoned: Lady Buckingham was the only woman there on Sunday se'nnight. The Duke of York was commanded home. They stopped his remittances, and then were alarmed on finding he still was somehow or other supplied with money. The two next Princes are at the Pavilions at Hampton Court, in very private circumstances indeed; no household is to be established for Prince William, who accedes nearer to the malcontents every day. In short, one hears of nothing but dissatisfaction, which in the City rises almost to treason.

Mrs. Cornwallis has found that her husband<sup>s</sup> has been dismissed from the Bedchamber this twelvemonth with no notice; his appointments were even paid; but on this discovery they are stopped.

You ask about what I had mentioned in the beginning of my letter, the dissensions in the house of Grafton. The world says they are actually parted: I do not believe that; but I will tell you exactly all I know. His Grace, it seems, for many months has kept one Nancy Parsons<sup>9</sup>, one of the commonest creatures in London, once much liked, but out of date. He is certainly grown uncommonly attached to her, so much, that it has put an end to all his decorum. She was publicly with him at Ascot races, and is now in the Forest<sup>10</sup>; I do not know if actually in the house<sup>11</sup>. At first, I concluded this was merely stratagem to pique the Duchess; but it certainly goes farther. Before the Duchess laid in, she had a little house on Richmond Hill, whither the Duke sometimes, though seldom, came to dine. During her month of confinement, he was scarcely in town at all, nor did he even come up to see the Duke of Devonshire. The Duchess is certainly gone to her father. She affected to talk of the Duke familiarly, and said she should call in the Forest as she went to Lord Ravensworth's. I suspect she is gone thither to recriminate and complain. She did not talk of returning till October. It was said the Duke was going to France, but I hear no more of it. Thus the affair stands, as far as I or your brother, or the Cavendishes, know; nor have we heard one word from either Duke or Duchess of any rupture. I hope she will not be so weak as to part, and that her father and mother will prevent it. It is not unlucky that she has seen none of the Bedfords lately, who would be glad to blow the coals. Lady Waldegrave was with her one day, but I believe not alone.

<sup>s</sup> General Hon. Edward Cornwallis.

There was nobody at Park Place but Lord and Lady William Campbell<sup>12</sup>. Old Sir John Barnard is dead; for other news, I have none. I beg you will always say a great <sup>9</sup> Also known as Mrs. Haughton or Horton. She married the second Viscount Maynard in 1776, and is supposed to have died about 1808.

<sup>10</sup> Whittlebury Forest in Northamptonshire, of which the Duke was Hereditary Ranger.

<sup>11</sup> Wakefield Lodge, near Stony Stratford.

<sup>12</sup> Sarah, daughter of Ralph Izard, of Charlestown, South Carolina; m. (1768) Lord William Campbell (d. 1778), fourth son of fourth Duke of Argyll.

deal for me to my Lady. As I trouble you with such long letters, it would be unreasonable to overwhelm her too. You know my attachment to everything that is yours. My warmest wish is to see an end of the present unhappy posture of public affairs, which operate so shockingly even on our private. If I can once get quit of them, it will be no easy matter to involve me in them again, however difficult it may be, as you have found, to escape them. Nobody is more criminal in my eyes than George Grenville, who had it in his power to prevent what has happened to your brother. Nothing could be more repugnant to all the principles he has ever most avowedly and publicly professed—but he has opened my eyes—such a mixture of vanity and meanness, of falsehood and hypocrisy, is not common even in this country! It is a ridiculous embarras after all the rest, and yet you may conceive the distress I am under about my Lady Blandford<sup>13</sup>, and the negotiations I am forced to employ to avoid meeting him there, which I am determined not to do.

I shall be able, when I see you, to divert you with some excellent stories of a principal figure on our side; but they are too long and too many for a letter, especially of a letter so prolix as this. Adieu, my dear Lord!

977. TO WILLIAM PITT.

SIR,

Arlington Street, Aug. 29, 1764.

As you have always permitted me to offer you the trifles printed at my press, I am glad to have one<sup>1</sup> to send you of a little more consequence than some in which I have had myself too great a share. The singularity of the work I now trouble you with is greater merit than its rarity; though there are but two hundred copies, of which only half are mine. If it amuses an hour or two of your idle time, I am overpaid. My greatest ambition is to pay that respect which every Englishman owes to your character and services; and therefore you must not wonder if an inconsiderable man seizes every opportunity, however awkwardly, of assuring you, Sir, that he is,

<sup>13</sup> The Marchioness of Blandford, widow of the son of Henrietta, Duchess of Marlborough (in her own right), married (as his second wife)

Sir William Wyndham, father of Mrs. George Grenville.

LETTER 977.—<sup>1</sup> The Life of Lord Herbert of Cherbury.

Your most devoted, &c.

978. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 29, 1764.

Among the multitude of my papers I have mislaid, though not lost, the account you was so good as to give me of your ancestor Tuer, as a painter. I have been hunting for it, to insert it in the new edition of my Anecdotes. It is not very reasonable to save myself trouble at the expense of yours, but perhaps you can much sooner turn to your notes, than I find your letter. Will you be so good as to send me soon all the particulars you recollect of him? I have a print of Sir Lionel Jenkins<sup>1</sup> from his painting.

I did not send you any more orange flowers, as you desired, for the continual rains rotted all the latter blow; but I had made a vast pot pourri, from whence you shall have as much as you please, when I have the pleasure of seeing you here, which I should be glad might be in the beginning of October, if it suits your convenience. At the same time you shall have a print of Lord Herbert, which I think I did not send you.

I am most truly yours,

HOR. WALPOLE.

P.S. I trust you will bring me a volume or two of your MSS., of which I am most thirsty.

LETTER 978.—<sup>1</sup> Sir Lionel or Leoline Jenkins, Knight (1628-1685), diplomatist and Principal of Jesus

College, Oxford. The print mentioned is from a picture by Cole's ancestor, Herbert Tuer.

979. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

September 1, 1764.

I SEND you the reply to the Counter Address; it is the lowest of all Grub Street, and I hear is treated so. They have nothing better to say, than that I am in love with you, have been so these twenty years, and am no giant. I am a very constant old swain: they might have made the years above thirty; it is so long I have had the same unalterable friendship for you, independent of being near relations and bred up together. For arguments, so far from any new ones, the man gives up or denies most of the former. I own I am rejoiced not only to see how little they can defend themselves, but to know the extent of their malice and revenge. They must be sorely hurt, when reduced to such scurrility. Yet there is one paragraph, however, which I think is of George Grenville's own inditing. It says, 'I flattered, solicited, and then basely deserted him.' I no more expected to hear myself accused of flattery, than of being in love with you; but I shall not laugh at the former as I do at the latter. Nothing but his own consummate vanity could suppose I had ever stooped to flatter him! or that any man was connected with him, but who was low enough to be paid for it. Where has he one such attachment!

You have your share too. The miscarriage at Rochfort now directly laid at your door; repeated insinuations against your courage. But I trust you will mind them no more than I do, excepting the flattery, which I shall not forget, I promise them.

I came to town yesterday on some business, and found a case. When I opened it, what was there but my Lady Ailesbury's most beautiful of all pictures<sup>1</sup>! Don't imagine LETTER 979.—<sup>1</sup> A landscape executed in worsteds by Lady Ailesbury. It is now at Strawberry Hill. Walpole.

I can think it intended for me; or that, if it could be so, I would hear of such a thing. It is far above what can be parted with, or accepted. I am serious—there is no letting such a picture, when one has accomplished it, go from where one can see it every day. I should take the thought equally kind and friendly, but she must let me bring it back, if I am not to do anything else with it, and it came by mistake. I am not so selfish as to deprive her of what she must have such pleasure in seeing. I shall have more satisfaction in seeing it at Park Place; where, in spite of the worst kind of malice, I shall persist in saying my heart is fixed. They may ruin me, but no calumny shall make me desert you. Indeed your case would be completely cruel, if it was more honourable for your relations and friends to abandon you than to stick to you. My option is made, and I scorn their abuse as much as I despise their power.

I think of coming to you on Thursday next for a day or two, unless your house is full, or you hear from me to the contrary. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

980. TO DR. BIRCH.

SIR,

September 3, 1764.

I am extremely obliged to you for the favour of your letter, and the enclosed curious one of Sir William Herbert<sup>1</sup>.

LETTER 980.—<sup>1</sup> Sir William Herbert, Knight (d. 1593), father-in-law of Lord Herbert of Chisbury. The letter (addressed to a gentleman named Morgan, of Glantyrnam, Monmouthshire) is given by Cunningham as follows:—

‘SIR,

Peruse this letter in God’s name. Be not disquieted. I reverence your hoary hair. Although in your son I find too much folly and lewdness, yet in you I expect gravity and wisdom. It hath pleased your son late at Bristol, to deliver a challenge to a man of mine on the behalf of a gentleman, as he said, as good as myself. Who he was he named not, neither do I know: but if he be as good as myself, it must either be for

It would have made a very valuable addition to Lord Herbert's Life, which is now too late; as I have no hope that Lord Powis will permit any more to be printed. There were indeed so very few, and but half of those for my share, that I have not it in my power to offer you a copy, having disposed of my part. It is really a pity that so singular a curiosity should not be public; but I must not complain, as Lord Powis has been so good as to indulge my request thus far. I am, Sir,

Your much obliged humble servant,

H. W.

981. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Sept. 25, 1764.

The third week in October will be just as convenient to me as any other time, and as you choose it, more agreeable, virtue, for birth, for ability, or for calling and dignity. For virtue I think he meant not; for it is a matter that exceeds his judgement. If for birth, he must be the heir male of an earl, the heir in blood of ten earls, for in testimony thereof I bear their several coats; besides, he must be of the blood royal, for by my grandmother Devereux I am lineally and legitimately descended out of the body of Edward the Fourth. If for ability, he must have a thousand pounds a year in possession, a thousand pounds a year more in expectation, and must have some thousands in substance besides. If for calling and dignity, he must be a knight and lord of several signiories in several kingdoms, a lieutenant of his county, and a counsellor of a province.

Now to lay all circumstances aside, be it known to your son or to any man else, that if there be any one who beareth the name of a gentleman, and whose words are of reputation in his county, that doth say, or dare say that I have done unjustly, spoken an untruth, stained my reputation or credit in this matter or in any matter else, wherein your son is exasperated, I say he lieth in his throat, and my sword shall maintain my word upon him in any place or province wheresoever he dare, where I stand not sworn to observe the peace. But if they be such, as are within my governance, and over whom I have authority, I will, for their reformation, chastise them with justice, and for their malapert misdeemeanour bind them to their good behaviour. Of this sort I account your son and his like, against whom I shall shortly direct my warrant, if this my warning will not reform him. And so I thought good to advertise you hereof and leave you to God.

Your loving cousin,

WILLIAM HERBERT.

From St. Julian.'

LETTER 981.—Not in C.; printed in the 4to ed. (1818) of the Letters to Cole; now printed from original in British Museum.

because when you are so obliging as to take the trouble of coming so far, I should not be easy, if it laid you under any difficulty. Shall we therefore settle it for the twenty-second or twenty-third of October?

Your ever obliged

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

982. TO THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.

MY LORD,

I am quite confounded that your Grace should think it necessary to make any excuses to me, or give yourself the trouble to call on me. I must not refuse the honour you design me, though if it is only from your Grace's great goodness to me, I would beg to receive your commands at Claremont, and hope if your Grace thinks a visit to me necessary, that you will look upon it as made. May I beg your Grace will really choose which is most convenient to you, and as you go to Gunnersbury on Monday, permit one of your servants to call at my house, and let me know where it will be most convenient for me to obey your commands.

I rejoice at any favourable accounts of the poor Duke of Devonshire; but I will say no more, as I am at Lady Suffolk's and have only Miss Hotham's pen and paper to write with.

I am, my Lord,

Your Grace's

Most obliged and

Most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

983. TO THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.

MY LORD,

The weather is so bad, that I own I should have been in pain at seeing your Grace here to-day, for fear of your getting cold, and I earnestly entreat your Grace not to think of it this year, unless the weather settles to be much finer than it has been lately. Whenever you have any commands for me, I am ready at a moment's warning if you please to send for me. On Thursday I should be proud of the honour of seeing your Grace, but I am to have company at dinner, who will probably come early to see the house, and might be troublesome to your Grace. If Friday is fine and your Grace chooses it, I shall be happy to receive the honour you design me; but I will not expect it, lest it should put your Grace to the least inconvenience.

I was unlucky in not receiving your Grace's orders sooner about Dr. Blanshard, having written to Lord Hertford but yesterday. I shall however go to London on Friday after dinner, and will find some way of sending a letter to Paris, for I scarce ever write by the post, and will take care to recommend Dr. Blanshard in so strong a manner that it shall be very agreeable to him, and show the great regard I have to your Grace's commands.

I am equally impatient with your Grace for more accounts from the Spa; I tremble, and yet am not without hopes. The return of the Duke's<sup>2</sup> old disorder, which in a like case saved Lord Chesterfield, raises one's spirits, and yet it is too early to be confident. If I should not have the honour of seeing your Grace on Friday, will you be so good as to let me know if I may have the pleasure of waiting on you any day next week ?

LETTER 983.—Not in C.; now first printed from original in British Museum.

<sup>1</sup> The Duke of Devonshire.

I am, with the greatest respect,

My Lord,

Your Grace's

Most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

984. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

MY DEAR LORD,

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 5, 1764.

Though I wrote to you but a few days ago, I must trouble you with another line now. Dr. Blanchard, a Cambridge divine, and who has a good paternal estate in Yorkshire, is on his travels, which he performs as a gentleman ; and, therefore, wishes not to have his profession noticed. He is very desirous of paying his respects to you, and of being countenanced by you while he stays at Paris. It will much oblige a particular friend<sup>1</sup> of mine, and consequently me, if you will favour him with your attention. Everybody experiences your goodness, but in the present case I wish to attribute it a little to my request.

I asked you about two books, ascribed to Madame de Boufflers. If they are hers, I should be glad to know where she found that Oliver Cromwell took orders and went over to Holland to fight the Dutch. As she has been on the spot where he reigned (which is generally very strong evidence), her countrymen will believe her in spite of our teeth ; and Voltaire, who loves all anecdotes that never happened, because they prove the manners of the times, will hurry it into the first history he publishes. I, therefore, enter my caveat against it ; not as interested for Oliver's character, but to save the world from one more fable. I know Madame de Boufflers will attribute this scruple to my partiality to Cromwell (and, to be sure, if we must be ridden, there is some satisfaction when the man knows how to ride). I remember one night at the Duke of Grafton's, a bust of Cromwell<sup>2</sup> was produced: Madame de Boufflers, without uttering a syllable, gave me the most speaking look imaginable, as much as to say, 'Is it possible you can admire this man!' Apropos, I am sorry to say the reports do not cease about the separation<sup>3</sup>, and yet I have heard nothing that confirms it.

LETTER 984.—<sup>1</sup> The Duke of Newcastle. See the preceding letter.

I once begged you to send me a book in three volumes, called Essais sur les Mœurs; forgive me if I put you in mind of it, and request you to send me that, or any other new book. I am wofully in want of reading, and sick to death of all our political stuff, which, as the Parliament is happily at the distance of three months, I would fain forget till I cannot help hearing of it. I am reduced to Guicciardin, and though the evenings are so long, I cannot get through one of his periods between dinner and supper. They tell me Mr. Hume has had sight of King James's journal<sup>4</sup>; I wish I could see all the trifling passages that he will not deign to admit into History. I do not love great folks till they have pulled off their buskins and put on their slippers, because I do not care sixpence for what they would be thought, but for what they are.

Mr. Elliot brings us woful accounts of the French ladies, of the decency of their conversation, and the nastiness of their behaviour.

Nobody is dead, married, or gone mad, since my last. Adieu!

<sup>2</sup> Engraved by Sherwin as a frontispiece to the second volume of Noble's House of Cromwell.

<sup>3</sup> Of the Duke and Duchess of Grafton.

<sup>4</sup> Published in 1816 by command of the Prince Regent among the Stuart Papers.

P.S. I enclose an epitaph on Lord Waldegrave, written by my brother, which I think you will like, both for the composition and the strict truth of it.

Arlington Street, Friday evening.

I was getting into my postchaise this morning with this letter in my pocket, and coming to town for a day or two, when I heard the Duke of Cumberland was dead: I find it is not so. He had two fits yesterday at Newmarket, whither he would go. The Princess Amelia, who had observed great alteration in his speech, entreated him against it. He has had too some touches of the gout, but they were gone off, or might have prevented this attack. I hear since the fits yesterday, which are said to have been but slight, that his leg is broken out, and they hope will save him. Still, I think, one cannot but expect the worst.

The letters yesterday, from Spa, give a melancholy account of the poor Duke of Devonshire: as he cannot drink the waters, they think of removing him; I suppose, to the baths at Aix-la-Chapelle; but I look on his case as a lost one. There's a chapter for moralizing! but five-and-forty, with forty thousand pounds a year, and happiness wherever he turned him! My reflection is, that it is folly to be unhappy at anything, when felicity itself is such a phantom!

985. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 5, 1764.

It is over with us!—If I did not know your firmness, I would have prepared you by degrees; but you are a man, and can bear the worst at once. The Duke of Cumberland<sup>1</sup> is dead. I have heard it but this instant. The Duke of Newcastle was come to breakfast with me, and pulled out a letter from Lord Frederick<sup>2</sup>, with a hopeless account of the poor Duke of Devonshire. Ere I could read it, Colonel Schutz called at the door and told my servant this fatal news! I know no more—it must be at Newmarket, and very sudden; for the Duke of Newcastle had a letter from Hodgson<sup>3</sup>, dated on Monday, which said the Duke was perfectly well, and his gout gone—yes, to be sure, into his head. Princess Amelia had endeavoured to prevent his going to Newmarket, having perceived great alteration in his speech, as the Duke of Newcastle had. Well! it will not be.—Everything fights against this country! Mr. Pitt must save it himself—or, what I do not know whether he will not like as well, share in overturning its liberty—if they will admit him; which I question now if they will be fools enough to do.

LETTER 985.—<sup>1</sup> William, Duke of Cumberland, son of George the Second. Walpole.—The Duke survived until October 1785.

You see I write in despair. I am for the whole, but perfectly tranquil. We have acted with honour, and have nothing to reproach ourselves with. We cannot combat fate. We shall be left almost alone; but I think you will no more go with the torrent than I will. Could I have foreseen this tide of ill fortune, I would have done just as I have done; and my conduct shall show I am satisfied I have done right. For the rest, come what come may, I am perfectly prepared! and while there is a free spot of earth upon the globe, that shall be my country. I am sorry it will not be this, but to-morrow I shall be able to laugh as usual. What signifies what happens when one is seven-and-forty, as I am to-day?

‘They tell me ’tis my birthday’—but I will not go on with Antony, and say

<sup>2</sup> Lord Frederick Cavendish. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Major-General (afterwards Field-Marshal) Studholme Hodgson (1708–1798), a member of the Duke’s household.

and I'll keep it
With double pomp of sadness.—

No; when they can smile, who ruin a great country, sure those who would have saved it may indulge themselves in that cheerfulness which conscious integrity bestows. I think I shall come to you next week; and since we have no longer any plan of operations to settle, we will look over the map of Europe, and fix upon a pleasant corner for our exile—for take notice, I do not design to fall upon my dagger, in hopes that some Mr. Addison a thousand years hence may write a dull tragedy about me. I will write my own story a little more cheerfully than he would; but I fear now I must not print it at my own press. Adieu! You was a philosopher before you had any occasion to be so: pray continue so; you have ample occasion!

Yours ever,
HOR. WALPOLE.

986. TO THE REV. THOMAS WARTON.

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 9, 1764.

I SHOULD be very ungrateful, Sir, if I did not execute with much pleasure any orders you give me. My knowledge is extremely confined and trifling, but such information as I can give you will always be at your service.

The most authentic picture of Margaret, Queen of Scotland, is a whole-length at Hampton Court. I have a small copy of the head by Vertue. She has a round face, blue eyes, and brown hair, not light.

The original of her sister Mary (with her second husband, Charles Brandon), which Vertue engraved while Lord Granville's, is now mine; her face is leaner and longer than in the print; her eyes blue, like her sister's, and her hair rather more dark. Vertue believed that the small head by Holbein, which I have, and was Richardson's, and which is engraved among the Illustrious Heads for Catherine Howard, is the portrait of this Queen Mary; but it has no resemblance to the large one, which is unquestionably of her. In the two first pictures I mentioned, Margaret is much superior to Mary in point of beauty, though I think neither of them handsome; nor is any sense in either face. The picture supposed of Catherine Howard has much expression, but little beauty; the print resembles it very imperfectly.

I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,
HOR. WALPOLE.

987. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 13, 1764.

LORD JOHN CAVENDISH has been so kind as to send me word of the Duke of Devonshire's<sup>1</sup> legacy to you. You cannot doubt of the great joy this gives me; and yet it serves to aggravate the loss of so worthy a man! And when I feel it thus, I am sensible how much more it will add to your concern, instead of diminishing it. Yet do not wholly reflect on your misfortune. You might despise the acquisition of five thousand pounds simply; but when that sum is a public testimonial to your virtue, and bequeathed by a man so virtuous, it is a million. Measure it with the riches of those who have basely injured you, and it is still more! Why, it is glory, it is conscious innocence, it is satisfaction—it is affluence without guilt—oh! the comfortable sound! It is a good name in the history of these corrupt days. There it will exist, when the wealth of your and their country's enemies will be wasted, or will be an indelible blemish on their descendants.

LETTER 987.—<sup>1</sup> William, fourth Duke of Devonshire. During his administration in Ireland Mr. Conway had been Secretary of State there. Walpole.

My heart is full, and yet I will say no more. My best loves to all your opulent family. Who says virtue is not rewarded in this world? It is rewarded by virtue, and it is persecuted by the bad. Can greater honour be paid to it?

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

988. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 21, 1764.

IN your letter of September 22nd, which I received but yesterday, you make excuses, my dear Sir, for your silence; but in good truth I fear I am not less culpable on that head. I have for many years pleaded summer and the country; you must add to the account now, that I am not only in the country, but in the minority; and you may be sure folks that are disposed to blame are not told anything that can be kept from them. London, whither I stroll now and then, is a desert. As the Parliament is not to meet till after Christmas, both armies remain in summer quarters. We, i. e. the offensive army, have lost one of our generals, the Duke of Devonshire. He has left General Conway five thousand pounds, which at least was not got out of the plunder. The Duke of Cumberland was reported dead three weeks ago, and the enemy still insist upon his dying; but he has escaped marvellously, by the help of St. Antony's fire, and though they have a good deal of luck, yet not having the Czarina's luck, I think for this time they will be disappointed. You see how frankly I write to hostile quarters, and even by the foe's couriers; but you know, no situation can alter my affection to you, and as usual, I am most indifferent who opens my letters.

I do not wonder you have thought me in France; I have been going and going like an auctioneer's hammer; but I think now I shall wait the opening of the campaign, and not go till early in the spring. I would not seem a deserter, but have little taste for this warfare. It neither suits my age nor inclinations, which can amuse themselves much better than with politics.

I was pleased with the Cardinal's<sup>1</sup> attention to his father on the subject of Amphitryon Duke of York<sup>2</sup>. It would have been a cruel close of his no-reign to have been witness to that triumph. I speak this from pure compassion, not being at all like Patriots of former days, whose principles veered to Albano<sup>3</sup> the moment they left St. James's; but I could never conceive why liking one court less, made them like any other more. I shall live and die in my old-fashioned Whiggism, be the mode what it will.

I am writing to you by Mr. Chute's bedside, who is laid up here with the gout. It is not one of his bad fits, which his perseverance in water does not suffer to come so often as they wish. He desires me to say a thousand kind things to you. As my gout cannot boast of so ancient a descent, I easily keep it in order by the same abstinence. If we had minded good advice from professors of gout, or bad advice from physicians, I do not doubt but he would be now in his grave, and I half a cripple; but we defy wine and all its works. I believe in it no more than in physic. James's powder is my panacea; that is, it always shall be, for, thank God! I am not apt to have occasion for medicines: but I have such faith in this powder, that I believe I should take it if the house was on fire. Have you ever had any of it sent to you? or shall I send you a parcel of papers?

LETTER 988.—<sup>1</sup> The Cardinal-Duke of York, second son of the Pretender. Edward, Duke of York, the King's brother, was then at Rome. Walpole. —The fact of the Duke's presence there was concealed by the Cardinal from his father.

<sup>2</sup> An allusion to the two Amphitryons (the pretended and the real Amphitryon) in Molière's comedy of that name.

<sup>3</sup> The Pretender had a villa at Albano. Walpole.

Well, we bid you good night; we have nothing more to tell you; he is going to sleep, and I and my dogs are retiring to the library.

989. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

I am heartily concerned for my disappointment and more for the cause of it. Take care of yourself, and by no means venture catching cold. I shall be equally glad to see you on Tuesday; but I beg you not to come even then, if your throat is not perfectly cured. Yours most sincerely,

HOR. WALPOLE.

990. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 27, 1764.

Though I am much concerned at not seeing you, I am more so at not hearing from you, as I fear your sore-throat has proved more troublesome than you apprehended. Pray write me one line to tell me how you are.

I will not trouble you with more now, but to enclose a sheet, by which I hope you will approve the manner in which I have obeyed you. Yours most faithfully,

HOR. WALPOLE.

991. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 29, 1764.

I AM glad you mentioned it: I would not have had you appear without your close mourning for the Duke of Devonshire upon any account. I was once going to tell you of it, knowing your inaccuracy in such matters; but thought it still impossible you should be ignorant how necessary it is. Lord Strafford, who has a legacy of only two hundred pounds, wrote to consult Lady Suffolk. She told him, for such a sum, which only implies a ring, it was sometimes not done; but yet advised him to mourn. In your case it is indispensable; nor can you see any of his family without it. Besides it is much better on such an occasion to over, than under do. I answer this paragraph first, because I am so earnest not to have you blamed.

LETTER 989.—Not in C.; printed in the 4to ed. (1818) of the Letters to Cole; now printed from original in British Museum.

LETTER 990.—Not in C.; printed in 4to ed. (1818) of the Letters to Cole; now printed from original in British Museum.

Besides wishing to see you all, I have wanted exceedingly to come to you, having much to say to you; but I am confined here, that is, Mr. Chute is: he was seized with the gout last Wednesday se'nnight, the day he came hither to meet George Montagu, and this is the first day he has been out of his bedchamber. I must therefore put off our meeting till Saturday, when you shall certainly find me in town.

We have a report here, but the authority bitter bad, that Lord March is going to be married to Lady [Anne] Conway<sup>1</sup>. I don't believe it the less for our knowing nothing of it; for unless their daughter were breeding, and it were to save her character, neither your brother nor Lady Hertford would disclose a tittle about it. Yet in charity they should advertise it, that parents and relations, if it is so, may lock up all knives, ropes, laudanum, and rivers, lest it should occasion a violent mortality among his fair admirers.

I am charmed with an answer I have just read in the papers of a poor man in Bedlam, who was ill-used by an apprentice because he would not tell him why he was confined there. The unhappy creature said at last, 'Because God has deprived me of a blessing which you never enjoyed.'

LETTER 991.—<sup>1</sup> Eldest daughter of Conway's brother, Lord Hertford. She married the sixth Earl of Drogheda in 1766.

There never was anything finer or more moving! Your sensibility will not be quite so much affected by a story I heard t'other day of Sir Fletcher Norton. He has a mother—yes, a mother: perhaps you thought that, like that tender urchin Love,

—duris in cotibus illum
Ismarus, aut Rhodope, aut extremi Garamantes,
Nec nostri generis puerum nec sanguinis edunt.

Well, Mrs. Rhodope lives in a mighty shabby hovel at Preston, which the dutiful and affectionate Sir Fletcher began to think not suitable to the dignity of one who has the honour of being his parent. He cheapened a better, in which were two pictures which the proprietor valued at threescore pounds. The attorney<sup>2</sup> insisted on having them for nothing, as fixtures—the landlord refused, the bargain was broken off, and the dowager Madame Norton remains in her original hut. I could tell you another story which you would not dislike; but as it might hurt the person concerned, if it was known, I shall not send it by the post; but will tell it you when I see you. Adieu!

Yours most cordially,

HOR. WALPOLE.

992. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Oct. 30, 1764.

I am rejoiced to hear you are well, but horridly vexed at my own negligence and oversight. Assure yourself I never wrote Procurer<sup>1</sup>, but Procureur, leaving the original term, as I think one seldom gives a just idea by translating titles. If I castrate the whole half-sheet, I will not leave it Procurer.

<sup>2</sup> Norton was Attorney-General.

LETTER 992.—Not in C.; printed in the 4to ed. (1818) of the Letters to Cole; now printed from original in British Museum.

<sup>1</sup> A reference to Walpole's account of Cole's ancestor Tuer, which was to be inserted in a new edition of the Anecdotes of Painting. In spite of Walpole's undertaking, the word objected to appears unaltered in the 4to, and in subsequent editions.

I am obliged to go to London on Saturday for two or three days, but have no doubt of being back here before Thursday 8th, and if I am, hope to see you for longer than a dinner. Thank you for your notices ; I am sure, say what you will, I am still in your debt for a thousand obliging instances of friendship—and in truth, am willing to be more so, for the communication of your MSS.

Yours most sincerely,

H. WALPOLE.

P.S. The enclosed trifle is only to fill up the packet.

993. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, Nov. 1, 1764.

I AM not only pleased, my dear Lord, to have been the first to announce your brother's legacy to you, but I am glad whenever my news reach you without being quite stale. I see but few persons here. I begin my letters without knowing when I shall be able to fill them, and then am to winnow a little what I hear, that I may not send you absolute second-hand fables ; for though I cannot warrant all I tell you, I hate to send you every improbable tale that is vented. You like, as one always does in absence, to hear the common occurrences of your own country ; and you see I am very glad to be your gazetteer, provided you do not rank my letters upon any higher foot. I should be ashamed of such gossiping, if I did not consider it as chatting with you en famille, as we used to do at supper in Grosvenor Street.

The Duke of Devonshire has made splendid provision for his younger children ; to Lady Dorothy, 30,000*l.* ; Lord Richard<sup>1</sup> and Lord George<sup>2</sup> will have about 4,000*l.* a year unmarried in 1781.

LETTER 993.—<sup>1</sup> Lord Richard Cavendish, the Duke's second son ; d.

<sup>2</sup> Lord George Augustus Henry apiece ; for, besides landed estates, he has left them his whole personal estate without exception, only obliging the present Duke<sup>3</sup> to redeem Devonshire House, and the entire collection in it, for 20,000*l.* : he gives 500*l.* to each of his brothers, and 200*l.* to Lord Strafford, with some other inconsiderable legacies. Lord Frederick carried the Garter, and was treated by the King with very gracious speeches of concern.

The Duke of Cumberland is quite recovered, after an incision of many inches in his knee. Ranby did not dare to propose that a hero should be tied, but was frightened out of his senses when the hero would hold the candle himself, which none of his generals could bear to do : in the middle of the operation, the Duke said, 'Hold !' Ranby said, 'For God's sake, Sir, let me proceed now—it will be worse to renew it.' The Duke repeated, 'I say, hold !' and then calmly bade them give Ranby a clean waistcoat and cap ; 'for,' said he, 'the poor man has sweated through these.' It was true ; but the Duke did not utter a groan.

Have you heard that Lady Susan O'Brien's is not the last romance of the sort ? Lord Rockingham's youngest sister, Lady Harriot<sup>4</sup>, has stooped even lower than a theatric swain, Cavendish (1754-1834), third son ; cr. Earl of Burlington in 1831.

<sup>3</sup> William Cavendish (1748-1811), fifth Duke of Devonshire.

<sup>4</sup> Lady Louisa Stuart's comments on this marriage are quoted in Lady Mary Coke's Journals (vol. i. p. 249) :— 'After marrying her footman, an Irish lad, Lady Harriet dropped her title, and as Mrs. Sturgeon went over with him to visit his parents in Ireland. Thence she carried him to France, where she put him into the hands of the best masters, and spared no pains to teach him the manners and behaviour of a gentleman. The soil was good and as yet unbroken, so she succeeded ; for Mrs. Weddell (Lady Rockingham's half-sister), who knew him in later days, said he was not to be distinguished from other men in good society, except by more exact good breeding, more of the vieille cour. His wife was one of those clever women who can never be quiet. She engaged him in mercantile schemes and speculations, which mostly turned out ill, and at one time threw him into jail. Their progeny, by Mrs. Weddell's account, had all a very distinguishing mark, namely, a most inordinate share of pride, more than all the Wentworths and Fitzwilliams that ever existed. But the fable of the mule who acknowledged no parentage but that of his mother the mare, is as old as Esop himself, I believe ; so we may end with a ça va sans dire.'

and married her footman; but still it is you Irish that commit all the havoc. Lady Harriot, however, has mixed a wonderful degree of prudence with her potion, and considering how plain she is, has not, I think, sweetened the draught too much for her lover: she settles a single hundred pounds a year upon him for his life; entails her whole fortune on their children, if they have any; and, if not, on her own family; nay, in the height of the novel, provides for a separation, and ensures the same pin-money to Damon, in case they part. This deed she has vested out of her power, by sending it to Lord Mansfield<sup>5</sup>, whom she makes her trustee; it is drawn up in her own hand, and Lord Mansfield says is as binding as any lawyer could make it. Did one ever hear of more reflection in a delirium! Well, but hear more: she has given away all her clothes, nay, and her Ladyship, and says linen gowns are properest for a footman's wife, and is gone to his family in Ireland, plain Mrs. Henrietta Sturgeon. I think it is not clear that she is mad, but I have no doubt but Lady Bel will be so, who could not digest Dr. Duncan<sup>6</sup>, nor even Mr. Milbank<sup>7</sup>.

My last told you of my sister's promotion<sup>8</sup>. I hear she is to be succeeded at Kensington by Miss Floyd, who lives with Lady Bolingbroke; but I beg you not to report this till you see it in a Gazette of better authority than mine, who have it only from fame and Mrs. A. Pitt.

I have not seen M. de Guerchy yet, having been in town but one night since his return. You are very kind in accepting, on your own account, his obliging expressions about me: I know no foundation on which I should like

<sup>5</sup> Her uncle by marriage.

<sup>6</sup> He married Lady Mary Tufton, a connection of Lady Isabella Finch.

<sup>7</sup> John, fourth son of Sir Ralph Milbanke, fourth Baronet, of Halnaby, Yorkshire; m. Lady Mary Wentworth, daughter of first Marquis of Rockingham, and niece of Lady Isabella Finch.

<sup>8</sup> To the post of Housekeeper at Windsor Castle. She was succeeded at Kensington Palace (where she held a similar post) by Miss Rachel Lloyd.

better to receive them: the truth is, he has distinguished me extremely, and when a person in his situation shows much attention to a person so very insignificant as I am, one is apt to believe it exceeds common compliment: at least, I attribute it to the esteem which he could not but see I conceived for him. His civility is so natural, and his good nature so strongly marked, that I connected much more with him than I am apt to do with new acquaintances. I pitied the various disgusts he received, and I believe he saw I did. If I felt for him, you may judge how much I am concerned that you have your share. I foresaw it was unavoidable, from the swarms of your countrymen that flock to Paris, and generally the worst part; boys and governors are woful exports. I saw a great deal of it when I lived with poor Sir Horace Mann at Florence—but you have the whole market. We are a wonderful people—I would not be our King, our minister, or our ambassador, for the Indies. One comfort, however, I can truly give you; I have heard their complaints, if they have any, from nobody but yourself. Jesus! if they are not content now, I wish they knew how the English were received at Paris twenty years ago—why, you and I know they were not received at all. Ay, and when the fashion of admiring English is past, it will be just so again; and very reasonably—who would open their house to every staring booby from another country?

Arlington Street, Nov. 3.

I came to town to-day to meet your brother, who is going to Euston and Thetford<sup>9</sup>, and hope he will bring back a good account of the domestic history<sup>10</sup>, of which we can learn nothing authentic. Fitzroy knows nothing. The town says the Duchess is going thither.

<sup>9</sup> General Conway was member for Thetford.

<sup>10</sup> Of the Duke and Duchess of Grafton.

We have been this evening with Duchess Hamilton, who is arrived from Scotland, visibly promising another Lord Campbell. I shall take this opportunity of seeing M. de Guerchy, and that opportunity of sending this letter, and one from your brother. Our politics are all at a stand. The Duke of Devonshire's death, I concluded, would make the ministry all-powerful, all-triumphant, and all-insolent. It does not appear to have done so. They are, I believe, extremely ill among themselves, and not better in their affairs foreign or domestic. The cider counties have instructed their members to join the minority. The house of Yorke seems to have laid aside their coldness and irresolution, and to look towards opposition. The unpopularity of the court is very great indeed—still I shall not be surprised if they maintain their ground a little longer. There is nothing new in the way of publication: the town itself is still a desert. I have twice passed by Arthur's to-day, and not seen a chariot.

Hogarth is dead, and Mrs. Spence, who lived with the Duchess of Newcastle. She had saved 20,000*l.*, which she leaves to her sister for life, and after her, to Tommy Pelham. Ned Finch has got an estate from an old Mrs. Hatton<sup>11</sup> of 1,500*l.* a year, and takes her name.

Adieu! my Lord and Lady, and your whole et cetera.

994. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

Strawberry Hill, Nov. 8, 1764.

I AM much disappointed, I own, dear Sir, at not seeing you: more so, as I fear it will be long before I shall, for I think of going to Paris early in February. I ought indeed to go directly, as the winter does not agree with me here. Without being positively ill, I am positively not well: about this time of year I have little fevers every night, and pains in my breast and stomach, which bid me repair to a more flannel climate. These little complaints are already begun, and as soon as affairs will permit me, I mean to transport them southward.

<sup>11</sup> Hon. Anne Hatton, daughter of first Viscount Hatton by his third wife, and aunt of Mr. Finch.

I am sorry it is out of my power to make the addition you wish to Mr. Tuer's article: many of the following sheets are printed off, and there is no inserting anything now, without shoving the whole text forwards, which you see is impossible. You promised to bring me a portrait of him; as I shall have four or five new plates, I can get his head into one of them; will you send it as soon as you can possibly to my house in Arlington Street? I will take great care of it, and return it to you safe. Thank you much for your corrections, though they are too late for my next edition; it is printed to past the middle of the third volume.

Yours most sincerely,

HOR. WALPOLE.

995. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, Nov. 9, 1764.

I DON'T know whether this letter will not reach you, my dear Lord, before one that I sent to you last week by a private hand, along with one from your brother. I write this by my Lord Chamberlain's order—you may interpret it as you please, either as by some new connection of the Bedford squadron with the opposition, or as a commission to you, my Lord Ambassador. As yet, I believe you had better take it upon the latter foundation, though the Duke of Bedford has crossed the country from Bath to Woburn, without coming to town. Be that as it may, here is the negotiation intrusted to you. You are desired by my Lord Gower to apply to the gentilhomme de la chambre for leave for Doberval the dancer, who was here last year, to return and dance at our Opera forthwith. If the court of France will comply with this request, we will send them a discharge in full for the Canada bills and the ransom of their prisoners, and we will permit Monsieur D'Estain to command in the West Indies, whether we will or not. The City of London must not know a word of this treaty, for they hate any mortal should be diverted but themselves, especially by anything relative to harmony. It is, I own, betraying my country and my patriotism to be concerned in a job of this kind. I am sensible that there is not a weaver in Spitalfields but can dance better than the first performer in the French Opera; and yet, how could I refuse this commission? Mrs. George Pitt delivered it to me just now, at Lord Holderness's at Sion, and as my virtue has not yet been able to root out all my good breeding—though I trust it will in time—I could not help promising that I would write to you—nay, and engaged that you would undertake it. When I venture, sure you may, who are out of the reach of a mob!

I believe this letter will go by Monsieur Beaumont<sup>1</sup>. He breakfasted here t'other morning, and pleased me exceedingly: he has great spirit and good humour. It is incredible what pains he has taken to see. He has seen Oxford, Bath, Blenheim, Stowe, Jews, Quakers, Mr. Pitt, the Royal Society, the Robin Hood<sup>2</sup>, Lord Chief-Justice Pratt, the Arts and Sciences, has dined at Wildman's<sup>3</sup>, and, I think, with my LETTER 995. — <sup>1</sup> Jean Baptiste Jacques Élie de Beaumont (1732–1786), a barrister, celebrated for his defence of the family of Calas.

<sup>2</sup> An 'oratorical club' in Essex Street, called the 'Robin Hood Society.' It met every Monday. 'Questions were proposed, and any persons might speak on them for seven minutes; after which the baker who presided with a hammer in his hand, summed up the arguments.' (Memoirs of George II, ed. 1822, vol. i. p. 36 n.)

<sup>3</sup> The opposition club in Albemarle Street.

Lord Mayor, or is to do. Monsieur de Guerchy is full of your praises; I am to go to Park Place with him next week, to make your brother a visit.

You know how I hate telling you false news: all I can do, is to retract as fast as I can. I fear I was too hasty in an article I sent you in my last, though I then mentioned it only as a report. I doubt, what we wish in a private family<sup>4</sup> will not be exactly the event.

The Duke of Cumberland has had a dangerous sore-throat, but is recovered. In one of the bitterest days that could be felt, he would go upon the course at Newmarket with the windows of his landau down. Newmarket heath, at no time of the year, is placed under the torrid zone. I can conceive a hero welcoming death, or at least despising it; but if I was covered with more laurels than a boar's head at Christmas, I should hate pain, and Ranby, and an operation. His nephew of York has been at Blenheim, where they gave him a ball, but did not put themselves to much expense in dancers; the figurantes were the maid-servants. You will not doubt my authority, when I tell you my Lady Bute was my intelligence. I heard to-day, at Sion, of some bitter verses made at Bath, on both their Graces of Bedford. I have not seen them, nor, if I had them, would I send them to you before they are in print, which I conclude they will be, for I am sorry to say scandalous abuse is not the commodity which either side is sparing of. You can conceive nothing beyond the epigrams which have been in the papers, on a pair of doves and a parrot that Lord Bute has sent to the Princess.

I hear—but this is another of my paragraphs that I am far from giving you for sterling—that Lord Sandwich is to have the Duke of Devonshire's Garter<sup>5</sup>; Lord Northumberland stands against Lord Morton<sup>6</sup> for President of the Royal Society, in the room of Lord Macclesfield. As this latter article will have no bad consequences if it should prove true, you may believe it.

<sup>4</sup> That of the Duke and Duchess of Grafton.

<sup>5</sup> Lord Sandwich never had the Garter.

Earl Poulet is dead, and Soame, who married Mrs. Naylor's sister.

You will wonder more at what I am going to tell you in the last place: I am preparing, in earnest, to make you a visit—not next week, but seriously in February. After postponing it for seven idle months, you will stare at my thinking of it just after the meeting of the Parliament. Why, that is just one of my principal reasons. I will stay and see the opening, and one or two divisions; the minority will be able to be the majority, or they will not: if they can, they will not want me, who want nothing of them: if they cannot, I am sure I can do them no good, and shall take my leave of them;—I mean always, to be sure, if things do not turn on a few votes: they shall not call me a deserter. In every other case, I am so sick of politics, which I have long detested, that I must bid adieu to them. I have acted the part by your brother that I thought right. He approves what I have done, and what I mean to do; so do the few I esteem, for I have notified my intention; and for the rest of the world, they may think what they please. In truth, I have a better reason, which would prescribe my setting out directly, if it was consistent with my honour. I have a return of those nightly fevers and pains in my breast, which have come for the three last years at this season: change of air and a better climate are certainly necessary to me in winter. I shall thus indulge my inclinations every way. I long to see you and my Lady Hertford, and am wofully sick of the follies and distractions of this country, to which I see no end, come what changes will! Now, do you wonder any longer at my resolution? In the meantime adieu for the present!

<sup>6</sup> James Douglas, fourteenth Earl of Morton, who was elected.

996. TO LADY HERVEY.

November 10, 1764.

SOH! Madam, you expect to be thanked, because you have done a very obliging thing! But I won't thank you, and I won't be obliged. It is very hard one can't come into your house and commend anything, but you must recollect it and send it after one! I will never dine in your house again; and when I do, I will like nothing; and when I do, I will commend nothing; and when I do, you shan't remember it. You are very grateful indeed to Providence that gave you so good a memory, to stuff it with nothing but bills of fare of what everybody likes to eat and drink! I wonder you are not ashamed—I wonder you are not ashamed! Do you think there is no such thing as gluttony of the memory?—You a Christian! A pretty account you will be able to give of yourself!—Your fine folks in France may call this friendship and attention, perhaps, but sure, if I was to go to the devil, it should be for thinking of nothing but myself, not of others, from morning to night. I would send back your temptations; but, as I will not be obliged to you for them, verily I shall retain them to punish you; ingratitude being a proper chastisement for sinful friendliness.

Thine in the spirit,

PILCHARD WHITFIELD<sup>1</sup>.

LETTER 996.—<sup>1</sup> Miss Berry conjectures that Lady Hervey had sent Horace Walpole some potted pilchards.

997. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Nov. 15, 1764.

CHURCHILL the poet is dead,—to the great joy of the ministry and the Scotch, and to the grief of very few indeed, I believe; for such a friend is not only a dangerous, but a ticklish possession. The next revolution would have introduced the other half of England into his satires, for no party could have promoted him, and woe had betided those that had left him to shift for himself on Parnassus! He had owned that his pen itched to attack Mr. Pitt and Charles Townshend; and neither of them are men to have escaped by their steadiness and uniformity. This meteor blazed scarce four years; for his Rosciad was subsequent to the accession of the present King, before which his name was never heard of; and what is as remarkable, he died in nine days after his antagonist<sup>1</sup>, Hogarth. Were I Charon, I should, without scruple, give the best place in my boat to the latter, who was an original genius. Churchill had great powers; but, besides the facility of outrageous satire, almost all his compositions were wild and extravagant, executed on no plan, and void of the least correction. Many of his characters were obscure even to the present age; and some of the most known were so unknown to him, that he has missed all resemblance; of which Lord Sandwich is a striking instance. He died of a drunken debauch at Calais, on a visit to his friend Wilkes, who is going to write notes to his Works. But he had lived long enough for himself, at least for his reputation and his want of it, for his works began to decrease considerably in vent. He has left some sermons, for he wrote even sermons; but lest they should do any retaliated by caricaturing Churchill as The Bruiser.

LETTER 997.—<sup>1</sup> Churchill attacked Hogarth on behalf of Wilkes in his Epistle to William Hogarth; the latter

good, and for fear they should not do some hurt, he had prepared a Dedication of them to Bishop Warburton, whose arrogance and venom had found a proper corrector in Churchill. I don't know whether this man's fame had extended to Florence; but you may judge of the noise he made in this part of the world by the following trait, which is a pretty instance of that good breeding on which the French pique themselves. My sister and Mr. Churchill are in France; a Frenchman asked him if he was Churchill le fameux poëte? 'Non.'—'Ma foi, monsieur, tant pis pour vous!'

Wilkes and Churchill, you know, were father and mother of D'Éon. This madman has begotten another, or rather has transmuted his old enemy De Vergy into an ally. The latter having been ten months in prison for debt, has been redeemed by D'Éon, and in gratitude, or in concert, has printed (and sent about) a French North Briton, in which he pretends to confess that he was brought over by Monsieur de Guerchy to cut D'Éon's throat. This legend is so ill put together that, on the face of it, it confutes itself. However, he has tacked an affidavit or oath to it; and I hear within these three days he has deposed the same on oath before Judge Wilmot. I am not positive that the last is fact, or whether it does not grow out of the printed affidavit, which I have read. However, the whole embroil is vexatious enough to poor Guerchy, who is in a country where to have any scandal believed it is not necessary to swear to it. His very being a foreigner would induce half this good town to supply the affidavit, without knowing anything of the matter.

Strawberry Hill, November 25th.

I had locked up this letter in town and forgot it, when I went to Park Place. It does not signify; my news were of no consequence and may as well come a week later as not. D'Éon has been cited to receive his sentence in the King's Bench, but absconded. That court issued a search-warrant for him, and a house was broken open, but he was not there. Thus that interlude is almost concluded. Wilkes is, I hear, going to Italy, so you will probably see one of these Sacheverells.

Sir Thomas Clarke, the Master of the Rolls, is dead, and makes some alteration in politics. Norton<sup>2</sup>, a man whom the world has heard of, and I suppose you too, succeeds him, and Charles Yorke reaccepts the Attorney-General's place. This will decrease our ill-starred minority by some votes; but England cannot pay its friends so well as the ministers of England can pay theirs. Well, it will all but expedite my journey to France, whither I have so long designed and wished to go, and for which I am in earnest preparing.

I have been in town to hear Manzoli. He is not so great as I expected, nor has such pleasing tones as Elisi, though a very fine singer. The Duke of York came into our box, and said a thousand gracious and kind things to me of you, and how sorry he had been to disappoint you in not returning to Florence. I told him how very happy I should make you by this account of his Royal Highness's goodness. Prince William is Duke of Gloucester, with twelve thousand pounds a year, like the Duke of York. The papers persisted in creating him Duke of Lancaster. I will tell you my reflection on this. What authority we should think it, if we could meet with a Daily Advertiser printed in the reign of Edward I! if it told us he had created one of his sons Duke of Twickenham, should not we say, that must be true; a paper printed in the capital could not assert a fact which every mortal could contradict? Yet, how are our old histories written? By monks at fifty or an hundred miles perhaps from the metropolis, when there was no post, scarce a highway: those reverend fathers must have been excellently well informed! I scarcely believe even a battle they relate—never their details.

<sup>2</sup> Sir Fletcher Norton, afterwards Speaker of the House of Commons and Baron Grantley. Walpole.

Adieu! my dear Sir; it will not be three months before I am nearer to you by some miles, and with no sea betwixt us—but I fear we shall not meet yet; I don't know.

P.S. I ought to tell you how excessively Manzoli was applauded.

998. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, Nov. 25, 1764.

How could you be so kind, my dear Lord, as to recollect Dr. Blanchard, after so long an interval? It will make me still more cautious of giving recommendations to you, instead of drawing upon the credit you give me. I saw Mr. Stanley last night at the Opera, who made his court extremely to me by what he said of you. It was our first opera, and I went to town to hear Manzoli, who did not quite answer my expectation, though a very fine singer, but his voice has been younger, and wants the touching tones of Elisi. However, the audience was not so nice, but applauded him immoderately, and encored three of his songs. The first woman was advertised for a perfect beauty, with no voice; but her beauty and voice are by no means so unequally balanced: she has a pretty little small pipe, and only a pretty little small person, and share of beauty, and does not act ill. There is Tenducci, a moderate tenor, and all the rest intolerable. If you don't make haste and send us Doberval, I don't know what we shall do. The dances were not only hissed, as truly they deserved to be, but the gallery, à la Drury Lane, cried out, 'Off! off!' The boxes were empty, for so is the town, to a degree. The person who ordered me to write to you for Doberval was reduced to languish in the Duchess of Hamilton's box. My Duchess does not appear yet—I fear.

Shall I tell you anything about D'Éon? it is sending coals to Paris: you must know his story better than me; so in two words: Vergy, his antagonist, is become his convert: has wrote for him, and sworn for him,—nay, has made an affidavit before Judge Wilmot, that Monsieur de Guerchy had hired him to stab or poison D'Éon. Did you ever see a man who had less of an assassin than your pendant, as Nivernois calls it! In short, the story is as clumsy as it is abominable. The King's Bench cited D'Éon to receive his sentence: he absconds: that court issued a warrant to search for him, and a house in Scotland Yard, where he lodged, was broken open, but in vain. If there is anything more, you know it yourself. This law transaction is buried in another. The Master of the Rolls, Sir Thomas Clarke<sup>1</sup>, is dead, and Norton succeeds. Who do you think succeeds him? his predecessor<sup>2</sup>. The house of York is returned to the house of Lancaster: they could not keep their white roses pure. I have not a little suspicion that disappointment has contributed to this faux pas. Sir Thomas made a new will the day before he died, and gave his vast fortune, not to Mr. Yorke, as was expected, but to Lord Macclesfield<sup>3</sup>, to whom, it is come out, he was natural brother. Norton, besides the Rolls, which are for life, and near 3,000*l.* a year, has a pension of 1,200*l.* Mrs. Anne Pitt, too, has got a third pension: so you see we are not quite such beggars as you imagined.

LETTER 998.—<sup>1</sup> Sir Thomas Clarke, Knight. There is apparently no foundation for Horace Walpole's assertion as to his parentage. He was succeeded by Sir William Sewell, Knight.

<sup>2</sup> Hon. Charles Yorke, Norton's predecessor as Attorney-General.

<sup>3</sup> Thomas Parker (1728–1795), third Earl of Macclesfield, whose grandfather had shown kindness to Clarke when a young man.

Prince William, you know, is Duke of Gloucester, with the same appanage as the Duke of York. Legrand<sup>4</sup> is his Cadogan; Clinton<sup>5</sup> and Ligonier<sup>6</sup> his grooms.

Colonel Crawford<sup>7</sup> is dead at Minorca, and Colonel Burton has his regiment; the Primate is better, but I suppose from his distemper, which is a dropsy in his breast, irrecoverable. Your Irish Queen<sup>8</sup> exceeds the English Queen, and follows her with seven footmen before her chair—well! what trumperies I tell you! but I cannot help it—Wilkes is outlawed, D'Éon run away, and Churchill dead—till some new genius arises, you must take up with operas, and pensions, and seven footmen.—But patience! your country is seldom sterile long.

George Selwyn has written hither his lamentations about that Cossack Princess. I am glad of it, for I did but hint it to my Lady Hervey (though I give you my word, without quoting you, which I never do upon the most trifling occurrences), and I was cut very short, and told it was impossible. À la bonne heure! Pray, who is Lord March going to marry? We hear so, but nobody named. I had not heard of your losses at whisk; but if I had, should not have been terrified: you know whisk gives no fatal ideas to anybody that has been at Arthur's, and seen hazard, Quinze, and Trente-et-Quarante. I beg you will prevail on the King of France to let Monsieur de Richelieu give as

<sup>4</sup> Legrand was appointed Treasurer to the Duke; Cadogan was Treasurer to the Duke of York.

<sup>5</sup> Colonel Henry Clinton (d. 1795), grandson of sixth Earl of Lincoln; K.B., 1776; General, 1793; Governor of Gibraltar, 1794–95. He took a prominent part in the American war, and was Commander-in-Chief in North America from 1778 until 1781.

<sup>6</sup> Colonel Edward (afterwards Earl) Ligonier.

<sup>7</sup> Colonel John Craufurd, seventh son of Patrick Craufurd, of Drumsoy. He was commanding officer at Minorca.

<sup>8</sup> The Countess of Northumberland.

many balls and fêtes as he pleases, if it is only for my diversion. This journey to Paris is the last colt's tooth I intend ever to cut, and I insist upon being prodigiously entertained, like a Sposa Monaca, whom they cram with this world for a twelvemonth, before she bids adieu to it for ever. I think, when I shut myself up in my convent here, it will not be with the same regret. I have for some time been glutted with the world, and regret the friends that drop away every day; those, at least, with whom I came into the world, already begin to make it appear a great void. Lord Edgumbe, Lord Waldegrave, and the Duke of Devonshire leave a very perceptible chasm. At the Opera last night, I felt almost ashamed to be there. Except Lady Townshend, Lady Schaub, Lady Albemarle, and Lady Northumberland, I scarce saw a creature whose début there I could not remember: nay, the greater part were Maccaronies. You see I am not likely, like my brother Cholmondeley (who, by the way, was there too), to totter into a solitaire at threescore. The Duke de Richelieu is one of the persons I am curious to see—oh! am I to find Madame de Boufflers, Princess of Conti? Your brother and Lady Aylesbury are to be in town the day after to-morrow to hear Manzoli, and on their way to Mrs. Cornwallis, who is acting l'agonisante; but that would be treason to Lady Aylesbury. I was at Park Place last week: the bridge is finished, and a noble object.

I shall come to you as soon as ever I have my congé, which I trust will be early in February. I will let you know the moment I can fix my time, because I shall beg you to order a small lodging to be taken for me at no great distance from your palace, and only for a short time, because, if I should like France enough to stay some months, I can afterwards accommodate myself to my mind. I should like to be so near you that I could see you whenever it would not be inconvenient to you, and without being obliged to that intercourse with my countrymen, which I by no means design to cultivate. If I leave the best company here, it shall not be for the worst. I am getting out of the world, not coming into it, and shall therefore be most indifferent about their acquaintance, or what they think of my avoiding it. I come to see you and my Lady Hertford, to escape from politics, and to amuse myself with seeing, which I intend to do with all my eyes. I abhor show, am not passionately fond of litterati, don't want to know people for a few months, and really think of nothing but some comfortable hours with you, and indulging my curiosity. Excuse almost a page about myself, but it was to tell you how little trouble I hope to give you.

999. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Dec. 3, 1764.

I LOVE to contradict myself as fast as I can when I have told you a lie, lest you should take me for a chambermaid, or Charles Townshend. But how can I help it? Is this a consistent age? How should I know people's minds, if they don't know them themselves? In short, Charles Yorke is not Attorney-General, nor Norton Master of the Rolls. A qualm came across the first, and my Lord Chancellor across the second, who would not have Norton in his court. I cannot imagine why; it is so gentle, amiable, honest a being! But I think the Chancellor says Norton does not understand equity, so he remains prosecutor-general. Yorke would have taken the Rolls, if they would have made it much more considerable; but as they would not, he has recollected that it will be clever for one Yorke to have the air of being disinterested, so he only disgraces himself, and takes a patent of precedence over the Solicitor-General :—but do not depend upon this—he was to have kissed hands on Friday, but has put it off till Wednesday next—between this and that, his virtue may have another fit. The court ridicule him even more than the opposition. What diverts me most, is, that the pious and dutiful house of Yorke, who cried and roared over their father's memory, now throw all the blame on him, and say he forced them into opposition—amorem nummi expellas furcâ, licet usque recurret. Sewell is Master of the Rolls.

Well ! I may grow a little more explicit to you ; besides, this letter goes to you by a private hand. I gave you little hints, to prepare you for the separation in the house of Grafton. It is so, and I am heartily sorry for it. Your brother is chosen by the Duke, and General Ellison by the Duchess, to adjust the terms, which are not yet settled. The Duke takes all on himself, and assigns no reasons but disagreement of tempers. He leaves Lady Georgiana with her mother, who, he says, is the properest person to educate her<sup>1</sup>, and Lord Charles, till he is old enough to be taken from the women. This behaviour is noble and generous—still I wish they could have agreed !

This is not the only parting that makes a noise. His Grace of Kingston has taken a pretty milliner from Cranborn Alley, and carried her to Thoresby. Miss Chudleigh, at the Princess's birthday on Friday, beat her side till she could not help having a real pain in it, that people might inquire what was the matter ; on which she notified a pleurisy, and that she is going to the baths of Carlsbad, in Bohemia. I hope she will not meet with the Bulgares that demolished the castle of Thundertentronck. My Lady Harrington's robbery is at last come to light, and was committed by the porter, who is in Newgate.

LETTER 999.—<sup>1</sup> Lady Georgiana Fitzroy (d. 1799), only daughter of third Duke of Grafton by his first wife ; m. (1778) John Smyth, of Heath Hall, near Wakefield, Yorkshire.

Lady Northumberland (who, by the way, has added an eighth footman since I wrote to you last) told me this morning that the Queen is very impatient to receive an answer from Lady Hertford, about Prince George's letters coming through your hands, as she desired they might.

A correspondence between Legge and Lord Bute about the Hampshire election<sup>2</sup> is published to-day, by the express desire of the former, when he was dying. He showed the letters to me in the spring, and I then did not think them so strong or important as he did. I am very clear it does no honour to his memory to have them printed now. It implies want of resolution to publish them in his lifetime, and that he died with more resentment than I think one should care to own. I would send them to you, but I know Dr. Hunter takes care of such things. I hope he will send you, too, the finest piece that I think has been written for liberty since Lord Somers. It is called An Inquiry into the late Doctrine on Libels, and is said to be written by one Dunning<sup>3</sup>, a lawyer lately started up, who makes a great noise. He is a sharp thorn in the sides of Lord Mansfield

<sup>2</sup> In 1759 Legge vacated his seat on succeeding to a patent place. He 'was returned for Hampshire. . . . This gave great offence to Bute, who had supported the candidature of Mr. (afterwards Sir Simeon) Stuart. Legge refused to give a pledge that he would support a candidate nominated by Bute, at a future election. . . . He afterwards refused Bute's further demand that he should give up the county of Southampton at the general election, and support the Prince of Wales' nomination of two members.' (D.N.B.)

<sup>3</sup> John Dunning (1781-1788), cr. (April 6, 1782) Baron Ashburton of Ashburton, Devonshire; Solicitor-General, 1768-70; Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, 1782-88. Dunning entered Parliament in 1768. He was a prominent opponent of Lord North's American policy. In April 1780 he moved the celebrated resolutions relative to the increasing power of the Crown, and to the necessity for reform of the Civil List. In consequence of his strongly-expressed views on pensions, his acceptance of one in 1782 was much commented upon. It is not certain that he was the author of the pamphlet mentioned by Walpole.

and Norton, and, in truth, this book is no plaster to their pain. It is bitter, has much unaffected wit, and is the only tract that ever made me understand law. If Dr. Hunter does not send you these things, I suppose he will convey them himself, as I hear there will be a fourteenth occasion for him. Charles Fitzroy says Lord Halifax told Mrs. Cosby that you are to go to Ireland<sup>4</sup>. I said he knows you are not the most communicative person in the world, and that you had not mentioned it—nor do I now, by way of asking impertinent questions; but I thought you would like to know what was said.

I return to Strawberry Hill to-morrow, but must return on Thursday, as there is to be something at the Duke of York's that evening, for which I have received a card. He and his brother are most exceedingly civil and good-humoured—but I assure you every place is like one of Shakespeare's plays:—Flourish, enter the Duke of York, Gloucester, and attendants. Lady Irwin died yesterday.

Past eleven.

I am just come from a little impromptu ball at Mrs. Anne Pitt's. I told you she had a new pension, but did I tell you it was five hundred pounds a year? It was entertaining to see the Duchess of Bedford and Lady Bute with their respective forces, drawn up on different sides of the room: the latter's were most numerous. My Lord Gower seemed very willing to promote a parley between the two armies. It would have made you shrug up your shoulders at dirty humanity, to see the two Miss Pelhams sit neglected, without being asked to dance. You may imagine this could not escape me, who have passed through the several gradations<sup>5</sup> in which Lady Jane Stuart and Miss Pelham are and have been; but I fear poor Miss Pelham feels hers a little more than ever I did. The Duke of York's is to be a dinner and ball for Princess Amelia.

<sup>4</sup> As Viceroy. This happened in the following year.

<sup>5</sup> As the child of a minister in and out of power.

Lady Mary Bowlby gave me a commission, a genealogic one, from my Lady Hertford, which I will execute to the best of my power. I am glad my part is not to prove eighteen generations of nobility for the Bruces. I fear they have made some mésalliances since the days of King Robert—at least, the present Scotch nobility are not less apt to go into Lombard Street than the English.

My Lady Suffolk was at the ball; I asked the Prince of Masserano whom he thought the oldest woman in the room, as I concluded he would not guess she was. He did not know my reason for asking, and would not tell me. At last, he said very cleverly, his own wife.

Mr. Sarjent has sent me this evening from you, Les Considérations sur les Mœurs, and Le Testament Politique, for which I give you, my dear Lord, a thousand thanks. Good night!

P.S. Manzoli is come a little too late, or I think he would have as many diamond watches and snuff-boxes as Farinelli had.

1000. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, Dec. 16, 1764.

As I have not read in the paper that you died lately at Greatworth, in Northamptonshire, nor have met any Montagu or Trevor in mourning, I conclude you are living: I send this, however, to inquire, and if you should happen to be departed, hope your executor will be so kind as to burn it. Though you do not seem to have the same curiosity about my existence, you may gather from my handwriting that I am still in being, which being perhaps full as much as you want to know of me, I will trouble you with no farther particulars about myself—nay, nor about anybody else; your curiosity seeming to be pretty much the same about all the world. News there are certainly none ; nobody is even dead, as the Bishop of Carlisle told me to-day, which I repeat to you in general, though I apprehend in his own mind he meant no possessor of a better bishopric.

If you like to know the state of the town, here it is. In the first place, it is very empty—in the next, there are more diversions than the week will hold. A charming Italian opera, with no dances and no company, at least on Tuesdays ; to supply which defect, the subscribers are to have a ball and supper—a plan that in my humble opinion will fill the Tuesdays and empty the Saturdays. At both playhouses are woful English operas ; which, however, fill better than the Italian, patriotism being entirely confined to our ears—how long the sages of the law may leave us those, I cannot say. Mrs. Cornelis<sup>1</sup>, apprehending the future assembly at Almack's, has enlarged her vast room, and hung it with blue satin, and another with yellow satin ; but Almack's room, which is to be ninety feet long, proposes to swallow up both hers, as easily as Moses's rod gobbled down those of the magicians. Well ! but there are more joys ; a dinner and assembly every Tuesday at the Austrian minister's ; ditto on Thursdays at the Spaniard's ; ditto on Wednesdays and Sundays at the French ambassador's ; besides Madame de Welderen's on Wednesdays, Lady Harrington's Sundays, and occasional private mobs at my Lady Northumberland's. Then for the mornings, there are levees and Drawing-rooms without end. Not to mention the Maccaroni Club, which has quite absorbed Arthur's, for you know old fools will hobble after young ones. Of all these pleasures, I prescribe myself a very small pittance ; my dark corner in my own box at the Opera, and now and then an ambassador—to keep my French going, till my journey to Paris. Politics are gone to sleep, like a paroli at pharaoh, though there is the finest tract lately published that ever was written, called an Inquiry into the Doctrine of Libels.—It would warm your old Algernon blood—but for what anybody cares, might as well have been written about the wars of York and Lancaster. The thing most in fashion is my edition of Lord Herbert's Life; people are mad after it—I believe because only two hundred were printed—and, by the numbers that admire it, I am convinced that if I had kept his Lordship's counsel, very few would have found out the absurdity of it. The caution with which I hinted at its extravagance has passed with several for approbation, and drawn on theirs. This is nothing new to me; it is when one laughs out at their idols that one angers people. I do not wonder now that Sir Philip Sidney was the darling hero, when Lord Herbert, who followed him so close and trod in his steps, is at this time of day within an ace of rivalling him. I wish I had let him; it was contradicting one of my own maxims, which I hold to be very just; that it is idle to endeavour to cure the world of any folly, unless one could cure it of being foolish.

LETTER 1000.—<sup>1</sup> Theresa Cornelys or Cornelis (1728–1797), formerly a singer. She purchased Carlisle House in Soho Square in 1760. Here she presided over public assemblies and concerts for some years. She became bankrupt in 1772, and after various adventures died in the Fleet Prison.

Tell me whether I am likely to see you before I go to Paris, which will be early in February. I hate you for being so indifferent about me. I live in the world, and yet love nothing, care a straw for nothing, but two or three old friends, that I have loved these thirty years. You have buried yourself with half a dozen parsons and squires, and yet never cast a thought upon those you have always lived with. You come to town for two months, grow tired in six weeks, hurry away, and then one hears no more of you till next winter. I don't want you to like the world; I like it no more than you; but I stay awhile in it, because while one sees it one laughs at it, but when one gives it up one grows angry with it; and I hold it much wiser to laugh than to be out of humour. You cannot imagine how much ill blood this perseverance has cured me of; I used to say to myself, 'Lord! this person is so bad, that person is so bad, I hate them.'—I have now found out that they are all pretty much alike, and I hate nobody. Having never found you out, but for integrity and sincerity, I am much disposed to persist in a friendship with you; but if I am to be at all the pains of keeping it up, I shall imitate my neighbours (I don't mean those at next door, but in the Scripture sense of neighbour, anybody), and say, 'That is a very good man, but I don't care a farthing for him.' Till I have taken my final resolution on that head, I am,

Yours most cordially,

H. WALPOLE.

1001. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Dec. 20, 1764.

I CANNOT approve of Mr. Chute's dropping your correspondence, don't think I do; but I must defend him where I know him innocent. There are no pains he has not taken about the Lucchi<sup>1</sup> and her daughter, nor anything he would not still do. But you, my dear Sir, have lived so long out of England, that you have lost all trace of idea of a country squire; such is the eldest Thistlethwaite; and a bankrupt to boot. The other is a country-squire-parson, an animal little more docile. Mr. Chute offered long ago if they would pay down the fortune, that he would be bound in the strongest bonds that they should never be troubled about it more—but could get no answer. He is ready to do so still.

LETTER 1001.—<sup>1</sup> A Florentine girl, by whom Mr. Whithed had a child. His name was Thistlethwaite, but he had changed it to Whithed for an estate. Walpole.

When Dagge talked to one of them and hinted at suing them, and that Mr. Chute must, for form only, be made a party, they flew out, and asked if Mr. Chute meant to go to law with them. With regard to Dagge, he was recommended to Mr. Whithed, Mr. Chute, and me by your brother Gal, and is in great reputation. Mr. Chute, the moment I mentioned your letter to him, undertook again to send Dagge to the brothers, and try if anything is to be obtained from them. Your goodness to the poor creatures is most amiable and like yourself; but indeed you wrong Mr. Chute grievously in saying that he has thrown them upon you. He would never suffer any such thing to be said, but I know how little he was obliged to Whithed; and the brothers who received everything from him, are not decent to their brother's child even about this miserable pittance; and Mr. Chute, so far from having any weight with them, would do more hurt than good, if he was too pressing in his own name.

I told you in my last that Mr. Yorke was to be Attorney-General, but it has ended in his accepting a patent of precedence over the Solicitor<sup>2</sup>. Nothing can surpass the foolish figure he has made, which has exposed him to the derision of both sides—and the sum total is, that this is the first time that a Yorke ever did anything but for money, and yet has been in the wrong!

Yesterday died that man of bustle and noisy name, the Primate of Ireland<sup>3</sup>: a sacrifice to drunkenness, which, however, was but a libation to ambition, for he was forced to drown his own intellects that he might govern the no-understandings of the Irish—indeed, he succeeded; and from the lowest state of unpopularity had raised himself to full power. You and I remember a primate<sup>4</sup> who had all the vices of this, and not much inferior parts, but who loved his vices as sages pretend to love virtue, for their own sakes. If Stone did not shine by his gratitude and moderation, at least he had unbounded charity and generosity, and whatever mischief he did, revenge was never the ingredient. I do not think the administration will be disposed to place the metropolitan mitre on an able head again in haste; and I am sure, in that case, they will have little difficulty to furnish themselves to their minds from the English bench, whence I hear the choice is to be made.

<sup>2</sup> William de Grey (1719–1781), knighted in 1771; cr. (Oct. 17, 1780) Baron Walsingham of Walsingham, Norfolk; Solicitor-General, 1763–66; Attorney-General, 1766–71; Lord

Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, 1771–80.

<sup>3</sup> Dr. Stone, Archbishop of Armagh. Walpole.

You will be concerned to hear, what perhaps will not surprise you more than it did me; the Duke and Duchess of Grafton are parted; on most honourable terms: he alleges nothing but disagreement of tempers, and she readily takes that blame on herself; though in truth, I never saw a case of less mutual complaisance. He gives her her jointure of three thousand pounds a year, and an allowance for their daughter and youngest son; which last, however, is to remain with her but till he is old enough to be taken from the women. The affair has been transacted as a contention of civility and generosity, and yet I think the Duke has taken his final resolution.

I know nothing of the Duke of York's squadron going to the Mediterranean, nor should think that either love or politics would carry him thither again. He has just got an addition of three thousand pounds a year on Ireland: his palace is delightful, and he has already given a ball there to Princess Amelie, at which I was, and where he again mentioned you fully, and with the greatest goodness.

My journey to Paris is fixed for some time in February,

<sup>4</sup> Monsieur de Beauvan, eldest son of the Prince de Craon, Primate of Lorraine. Walpole.

where I hear I may expect to find Madame de Boufflers<sup>5</sup>, Princess of Conti. Her husband is just dead; and you know the house of Bourbon have an alacrity at marrying their old mistresses<sup>6</sup>. She was here last year, being extremely infected with the Anglomanie, though I believe pretty well cured by her journey. She is past forty, and does not appear ever to have been handsome, but is one of the most agreeable and sensible women I ever saw; yet I must tell you a trait of her that will not prove my assertion. Lady Holland asked her how she liked Strawberry Hill? She owned she did not approve of it, and that it was not digne de la solidité anglaise. It made me laugh for a quarter of an hour. They allot us a character we have not, and then draw consequences from that idea, which would be absurd, even if the idea was just. One must not build a Gothic house because the nation is solide. Perhaps, as everything now in France must be à la grecque, she would have liked a hovel if it pretended to be built after Epictetus's—but Heaven forbid that I should be taken for a philosopher! Is it not amazing that the most sensible people in France can never help being domineered by sounds and general ideas? Now everybody must be a géomètre, now a philosophe, and the moment they are either, they are to take up a character and advertise it: as if one could not study geometry for one's amusement or for its utility, but one must be a geometrician at table, or at a visit! So the moment it is settled at Paris that the English are solid, every Englishman must be wise, and, if he has a good understanding, he must not be allowed to play the fool! As I happen to like both sense and nonsense, and the latter <sup>5</sup> This was not the Marquise de Boufflers, daughter of the Prince de Craon, and favourite of King Stanislaus, mentioned in a former letter, but the Comtesse de Boufflers, mistress of the Prince de Conti. Walpole.

<sup>6</sup> Louis XIV married Madame de Maintenon, and his son was supposed to be married to Mademoiselle Chouin. Walpole.

better than what generally passes for the former, I shall disclaim, even at Paris, the profondeur for which they admire us; and I shall not cease to admire Madame de Boufflers, though her nonsense is not the result of nonsense, but of sense, and consequently not the genuine nonsense that I honour. When she was here, she read a tragedy in prose to me, of her own composition, taken from the Spectator: the language is beautiful and the sentiments too.

There is a Madame de Beaumont<sup>7</sup> who has lately written a very pretty novel, called Lettres du Marquis de Roselle. It is imitated, too, from an English standard, and in my opinion a most woful one; I mean the works of Richardson, who wrote those deplorably tedious lamentations, Clarissa and Sir Charles Grandison, which are pictures of high life as conceived by a bookseller<sup>8</sup>, and romances as they would be spiritualized by a Methodist teacher: but Madame de Beaumont has almost avoided sermons, and almost reconciled sentiments and common sense. Read her novel—you will like it.

1002. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Christmas Eve, 1764.

You are grown so good, and I delight so much in your letters when you please to write them, that though it is past midnight, and I am to go out of town to-morrow morning, I must thank you.

I shall put your letter to Rheims into the foreign post with a proper penny, and it will go much safer and quicker than if I sent it to Lord Hertford, for his letters lie very often till enough are assembled to compose a jolly caravan.

I love your good brother John, as I always do, for keeping your birthday—I, who hate ceremonious customs, approve of what I know comes so much from the heart as all he and you do and say. The General surely need not ask leave to enclose letters to me.

<sup>7</sup> Wife of Monsieur Élie de Beaumont, a celebrated lawyer. Walpole.

<sup>8</sup> Richardson was not a bookseller, but a printer. Walpole.

There is neither news, nor anybody to make it, but the clergy, who are all gaping after or about the Irish mitre, which your old antagonist has quitted. Keene has refused it, Newton hesitates, and they think will not accept it, Ewer<sup>1</sup> pants for it, and many of the bench, I believe, do everything but pray for it. Goody Carlisle<sup>2</sup> hopes for Worcester if it should be vacated, but I believe would not dislike to be her Grace.

This comes with your muff, my Anecdotes of Painting, the fine pamphlet on libels, and the Castle of Otranto, which lost its maidenhead to-day. All this will make some food for your fireside.

Since you will not come and see me before I go, I hope not to be gone before you come, though I am not quite in charity with you about it. Oh! I had forgot; don't lend your Lord Herbert, it will grow as dirty as the street, and as there are so few, and they have been so lent about, and so dirtied, the few clean copies will be very valuable. What signifies whether they read it or not? there will be a new fashion, or a new separation, or a new something or other, that will do just as well, before you can convey your copy to them; and, seriously, if you lose it, I have not another to give you; and I would fain have you keep my editions together, as you have had the complete set. As I want to make you an economist of my books, I will inform you that this second set of Anecdotes sells for three guineas. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

LETTER 1002.—<sup>1</sup> John Ewer (d. 1774), Bishop of Llandaff; translated to Bangor in 1769.

<sup>2</sup> Charles Lyttelton, Bishop of Carlisle, the old friend and schoolfellow of Walpole and Montagu.

P.S. I send you a decent smallish muff, that you may put in your pocket, and it costs but fourteen shillings.

1003. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Jan. 10, 1765.

I SHOULD prove a miserable prophet or almanac maker, for my predictions are seldom verified. I thought the present session likely to be a very supine one, but unless the evening varies extremely from the morning, it will be a tempestuous day—and yet it was a very southerly and calm wind that began the hurricane. The King's Speech was so tame, that, as George Montagu said of the earthquake, you might have stroked it. Beckford (whom I certainly did not mean by the gentle gale) touched on Draper's Letter about the Manilla money<sup>1</sup>. George Grenville took up the defence of the Spaniards, though he said he only stated their arguments. This roused your brother, who told Grenville he had adopted the reasoning of Spain; and showed the fallacy of their pretensions. He exhorted everybody to support the King's government, 'which I,' said he, 'ill-used as I have been, wish and mean to support—not that of ministers, when I see the laws and independence of Parliament struck at in the most profligate manner.' You may guess how deeply this wounded. Grenville took it to himself, and asserted that his own life and character were as pure, uniform, and little profligate as your brother's. The silence of the House did not seem to ratify this declaration. Your brother replied with infinite spirit, that he certainly could not have meant Mr. Grenville, for he did not take him for the minister—(I do not believe this was

LETTER 1003. — <sup>1</sup> Answer to the Spanish arguments claiming the Gal-leon and refusing Payment of the Manilla Ransom from Pillage and Destruction.

the least mortifying part)—that he spoke of public acts that were in everybody's mouth, as the warrants, and the disgrace thrown on the army by dismissions for parliamentary reasons ; that for himself he was an open enemy, and detested men who smiled in his face and stabbed him—(I do not believe he meant this personally, but unfortunately the whole House applied it to Mr. Grenville's grimace) ; that for his own disgrace, he did not know where to impute it, for every minister had disavowed it. It was to the warrants, he said, he owed what had happened ; he had fallen for voting against them, but had he had ten regiments, he would have parted with them all to obey his conscience ; that he now could fall no lower, and would speak as he did then, and would not be hindered nor intimidated from speaking the language of Parliament. Grenville answered, that he had never avowed nor disavowed the measure of dismissing Mr. Conway—(he disavowed it to Mr. Harris<sup>2</sup>), that he himself had been turned out for voting against German connections<sup>3</sup> ; that he had never approved inquiring into the King's prerogative on that head—(I can name a person who can repeat volumes of what he has said on the subject), and that the King had as much right to dismiss military as civil officers, and then drew a ridiculous parallel betwixt the two, in which he seemed to give himself the rank of a civil lieutenant-general. This warmth was stopped by Augustus Hervey, who spoke to order, and called for the question ; but young T. Townshend confirmed, that the term profligacy was applied by all mankind to the conduct on the warrants. It was not the most agreeable circumstance to Grenville, that Lord Granby closed the debate, by declaring how much he disapproved the dismissal of officers for civil reasons, and the more, as he was persuaded it would not prevent officers from acting according to their consciences ; and he spoke of your brother with many encomiums. Sir W. Meredith then notified his intention of taking up the affair of the warrants on Monday se'nnight. Mr. Pitt was not there, nor Lord Temple in the House of Lords ; but the latter is ill. I should have told you that Lord Warkworth<sup>4</sup> and Thomas Pitt moved our Addresses ; as Lord Townshend and Lord Botetourt did those of the Lords. Lord Townshend said, though it was grown unpopular to praise the King, yet he should, and he was violent against libels ; forgetting that the most ill-natured branch of them, caricaturas, his own invention, are left off. Nobody thought it worth while to answer him, at which he was much offended.

<sup>2</sup> General Conway's brother-in-law.

<sup>3</sup> Grenville was dismissed from the Treasurership of the Navy in

Nov. 1755, for opposition to treaties made to secure the German dominions of George II.

So much for the opening of the Parliament, which does not promise serenity. Your brother is likely to make a very great figure : they have given him the warmth he wanted, and may thank themselves for it. Had Mr. Grenville taken my advice, he had avoided an opponent that he will find a tough one, and must already repent having drawn upon him.

With regard to yourself, my dear Lord, you may be sure I did not intend to ask you any impertinent question. You requested me to tell you whatever I heard said about you ; you was talked of for Ireland, and are still ; and Lord Holland within this week told me, that you had solicited it warmly. Don't think yourself under any obligation to reply to me on these occasions. It is to comply with your desires that I repeat anything I hear of you, not to make use of them to draw any explanation from you, to which I have no title ; nor have I, you know, any troublesome curiosity. I mentioned Ireland with the same indifference that I tell you that the town here has bestowed Lady Anne, first on

<sup>4</sup> Afterwards second Duke of Northumberland.

Lord March, and now on Stephen Fox<sup>5</sup>—tattle not worth your answering.

You have lost another of your Lords Justices, Lord Shannon, of whose death an account came yesterday.

Lady Harrington's porter was executed yesterday, and went to Tyburn with a white cockade in his hat, as an emblem of his innocence.

All the rest of my news I exhausted in my letter to Lady Hertford three days ago. The King's Speech, as I told her it was to do, announced the contract between Princess Caroline Matilda<sup>6</sup> and the Prince Royal of Denmark.

I don't think the tone the session has taken will expedite my visit to you; however, I shall be able to judge when a few of the great questions are over. The American affairs are expected to occasion much discussion; but as I understand them no more than Hebrew, they will throw no impediment in my way. Adieu! my dear Lord; you will probably hear no more politics these ten days. Yours ever.

Friday.

The debate on the warrants is put off to the Tuesday; therefore, as it will probably be so long a day, I shall not be able to give you an account of it till this day fortnight.

1004. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Jan. 13, 1765.

ARE not you growing impatient for news, now the Parliament is opened? Here is a new year begun, the twenty-fourth of our correspondence! Orestes and Pylades are not to be named with us ; their friendship would have cooled in a quarter of the time. Well, what do you expect ? that, having lost all our chiefs, we have laid down our arms, and been fined in the Star Chamber, or what would come to much the same thing for the people, that we have sold our remnant of opposition for half a dozen pensions ? You are mistaken ; there are a few drops of Mercian and Cambrian blood still left in our veins. The Address on Thursday went unanimously, in answer to a very tame speech ; but not till after a very spirited dialogue between Mr. Conway and Mr. Grenville, in which the former shone greatly, painting in strong colours the scandalous treatment he had received from a profligate administration ; the epithet was his, but I believe will remain theirs. Lord Granby declared warmly against dismissions of officers for their conduct in Parliament. This prologue was brief, but smart. We shall probably have nothing particular till Tuesday se'nnight, which is fixed for a renewal of the great question on the warrants, the subject of which has been revived by a large pamphlet, that is in the highest vogue, called An Inquiry into the Doctrine of Libels. Though bulky, it is already at its third edition ; nor can all the court-lawyers, court-scribblers, or court-liars, hitherto frame an answer to it. They nibble at its heels, but cannot fix a tooth in it.

<sup>5</sup> Hon. Stephen Fox (1745–1774), eldest son of first Lord Holland, whom he succeeded in July 1774.

<sup>6</sup> Princess Caroline Matilda (1751–1775), posthumous daughter of Frederick, Prince of Wales; m. (1766) Christian VII, King of Denmark, from whom she was divorced in 1772. She died in exile at Celle.

The King's Speech acquainted us with a future marriage between his youngest sister and the Prince Royal of Denmark. Princess Louisa<sup>1</sup>, who is older, and has a very pretty face, is of uncommonly small stature, and unhealthy.

There is another approaching wedding notified, between Lord Shelburne and Lady Sophia Carteret, the only child of our old friend Lady Sophia Fermor, by Lord Granville. Her face has the beauty of neither, and is like her half-sisters<sup>2</sup>; but her air and person would strike you from the strong resemblance to her mother. She has above thirty thousand pounds, and he two and twenty thousand a year. Their children will have the seeds in them of some extraordinary qualities, look whither you will.

LETTER 1004.—<sup>1</sup> Princess Louisa Anne, third daughter of Frederick,

Prince of Wales ; d. unmarried in 1768.

There has been a bustle in the Cabinet, more remarkable for its symptoms than its effects. That busy ambitious prelate, Stone, is dead, as I told you I think in my last. Mr. Grenville, believing himself possessed of power, because he runs all the risk of it, offered the Archiepiscopal mitre about the town, without remembering to ask if it was in his disposal. Two English Bishops declined it. Lord Granby then solicited it for his tutor, Ewer of Llandaff, and was supported by the imaginary minister; but the Lord Lieutenant (the most acute commentators read Lord Bute) carried off the primacy for Robinson<sup>3</sup>, Bishop of Kildare. The Duke of Bedford, still more a phantom than Grenville, imagined he could obtain the nomination, and demanded it for a Scoto-Hibernian, Bishop Carmichael<sup>4</sup>; but the Scotch are too wise for many of them to embark in that channel.

Well, well! all this is piddling, and not in the great style of our country; these are such little cabals as happen in every nation. 'Tis the marvellous, the eccentric, that characterizes Englishmen. Come, you shall have an event in the genuine taste, and before it has been pawed and vulgarized by newsmongers and newspapers. It is fresh this very day. There is somebody dead somewhere—strong marks of novelty you see—in Somersetshire or Wiltshire, I think, who has left two hundred thousand pounds to

<sup>2</sup> The Countess of Cowper and the Marchioness of Tweeddale, younger daughters of Lord Granville by his first wife. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Richard Robinson (d. 1794). He became Archbishop of Armagh, and was created (Feb. 26, 1777) Baron Rokeby of Armagh in Ireland.

<sup>4</sup> Hon. William Carmichael, Archbishop of Dublin, second son of second Earl of Hyndford.

Mr. Pitt, to Mr. William Pitt, to the Pitt, the man who frightened the Great Mogul so three years ago, and who had liked to have tossed the Kings of France and Spain in a blanket, if somebody had not cut a hole in it and let them slip through. Somebody the first, was called Pinsent<sup>5</sup> or Vincent—the town and I are not sure of the name yet; but it is certain he never saw the said Mr. Pitt—I hope that was not the best reason for the legacy! The parson of the parish, who made the will, has sent word to Hayes<sup>6</sup> that it is lodged in the housekeeper's hands, who has command from the defunct not to deliver it but to the legatee, or order. Unluckily, Mr. Pitt is in bed with the gout in his hand, and cannot even sign the order; however, Lady Chatham has sent for the will, and it is supposed her order will suffice. You may depend on all this latter part; I had it but two hours ago from Lady Temple, whose lord has been to Hayes this morning on this affair. The deceased, it seems, had voted against the first treaty of Utrecht, and had lived to see a second<sup>7</sup>. I do believe now that this country will be saved at last, for we shall have real Patriots, when the opposition pays better than the court. Don't you think that Mr. Pitt would give half his legacy that he had never accepted a pension? It is very singular; ten thousand pounds from old Marlborough<sup>8</sup>, a reversion of a great estate from Jack Spencer, and this fortune out of the clouds! Lord Bath indeed—but I never heard it was for his virtues or services—was in so many testaments, that they used to call him emphatically, Will

<sup>5</sup> Sir William Pynsent, third Baronet, of Burton Pynsent, Somersetshire. His bequest to Pitt amounted to some forty thousand pounds in real and personal estate.

<sup>6</sup> Villa of Mr. Pitt, near Bromley, in Kent. Walpole.

<sup>7</sup> The Treaty of Paris. Walpole.

<sup>8</sup> The Duchess Dowager of Marlborough left Mr. Pitt ten thousand pounds, and her grandson, John Spencer, entailed the Sunderland estate upon him after his own son; but that son, afterwards Earl Spencer, cut off that entail as soon as he came of age. Walpole.

Pulteney—it is more pleasant to be called Will Pitt from such tributes to his merit. Adieu ! till the next big event.

1005. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Sunday, Jan. 20, 1765.

Do you forgive me, if I write to you two or three days sooner than I said I would. Our important day on the warrants is put off for a week, in compliment to Mr. Pitt's gout—can it resist such attention? I shall expect it in a prodigious quantity of black ribands. You have heard, to be sure, of the great fortune that is bequeathed to him by a Sir William Pynsent, an old man of near ninety, who quitted the world on the Peace of Utrecht ; and, luckily for Mr. Pitt, lived to be as angry with its pendant, the treaty of Paris. I did not send you the first report, which mounted it to an enormous sum : I think the medium account is two thousand pounds a year, and thirty thousand pounds in money. This Sir William Pynsent, whose fame, like an aloe, did not blow till near an hundred, was a singularity. The scandalous chronicle of Somersetshire talks terribly of his morals. . . . Lady North was nearly related to Lady Pynsent, which encouraged Lord North to flatter himself that Sir William's extreme propensity to him would recommend even his wife's parentage for heirs ; but the uncomeliness of Lady North, and a vote my Lord gave against the Cider Bill, offended the old gentleman so much, that he burnt his would-be heir in effigy. How will all these strange histories sound at Paris !

This post, I suppose, will rain letters to my Lady Hertford, on her death and revival. I was dreadfully alarmed at it for a moment ; my servant was so absurd as to wake me, and bid me not be frightened—an excellent precaution ! Of all moments, that between sleeping and waking is the most subject to terror. I started up, and my first thought was to send for Dr. Hunter; but, in two minutes, I recollected that it was impossible to be true, as your porter had the very day before been with me to tell me a courier was arrived from you, and was to return that evening. Your poor son Henry, whom you will dote upon for it, was not tranquillized so soon. He instantly sent away a courier to your brother, who arrived in the middle of the night. Lady Milton, Lady George Sackville, and I, agreed this evening to tell my Lady Hertford, that we ought to have believed the news, and to have imputed it to the gaming rakehelly life my Lady leads at Paris, which scandalizes all us prudes, her old friends. In truth, I have not much right to rail at anybody for living in a hurricane. I found myself with a violent cold on Wednesday, and till then had not once reflected on all the hot and cold climates I had passed through the day before: I had been at the Duke of Cumberland's levee: then at Princess Amalie's Drawing-room; from thence to a crowded House of Commons; to dinner at your brother's; to the Opera; to Madame Seilern's<sup>1</sup>; to Arthur's; and to supper at Mrs. George Pitt's; it is scandalous; but, who does less? The Duke looked much better than I expected; is gone to Windsor, and mends daily.

It was Lady Harcourt's<sup>2</sup> death that occasioned the confusion, and our dismay. She died at a Colonel Oughton's; such a small house, that Lord Harcourt has been forced to take their family into his own house. Poor Lady Digby is dead too, of a fever, and was with child. They were extremely happy, and her own family adored her. My sister has begged me to ask a favour, that will put you to a little trouble, though only for a moment. It is, if you will be so good to order one of your servants when you have done with the English newspapers, to put them in a cover, and send them to Mr. Churchill, au Château de Nubecourt, près de Clermont en Argone<sup>3</sup>; they cannot get a Gazette that does not cost them six livres.

LETTER 1005.—<sup>1</sup> Wife of the Austrian Ambassador.

<sup>2</sup> Rebecca, daughter of Charles Samborne Le Bas, of Pipwell Abbey, Northamptonshire; m. (1735) Simon Harcourt, second Viscount (afterwards first Earl) Harcourt.

Monday evening.

We have had a sort of day in the House of Commons. The proposition for accepting the six hundred and seventy thousand pounds for the French prisoners passed easily. Then came the navy: Dowdeswell, in a long and very sensible speech, proposed to reduce the number of sailors to ten thousand. He was answered by—Charles Townshend—oh yes!—are you surprised? nobody here was: no, not even at his assertion, that he had always applauded the Peace, though the whole House and the whole town knew that, on the preliminaries, he came down prepared to speak against them; but that on Pitt's retiring, he plucked up courage, and spoke for them. Well, you want to know what place he is to have—so does he too. I don't want to know what place, but that he has some one; for I am sure he will always do most hurt to the side on which he professes to be; consequently, I wish him with the administration, and I wish so well to both sides, that I would have him more decried, if that be possible, than he is. Colonel Barré spoke against Dowdeswell's proposal, though not setting himself up at auction, like Charles, nor friendly to the ministry, but temperately and sensibly. There was no division. You know my opinion of Charles Townshend is neither new nor singular. When Charles Yorke left us, I hoped for this event, and my wish then slid into this couplet:

<sup>3</sup> In the department of Meuse, west of Verdun.

TO THE ADMINISTRATION.

One Charles, who ne'er was ours, you've got—'tis true:
To make the grace complete, take t'other too.

The favours I ask of them are not difficult to grant.
Adieu! my dear Lord.

Yours ever,

H. W.

Tuesday, 4 o'clock.

I had sealed my letter and given it to my sister, who sets out to-morrow, and will put it into the post at Calais; but having received yours by the courier from Spain, I must add a few words. You may be sure I shall not mention a tittle of what you say to me. Indeed, if you think it necessary to explain to me, I shall be more cautious of telling you what I hear. If I had any curiosity, I should have nothing to do but to pretend I had heard some report, and so draw from you what you might not have a mind to mention: I do tell you when I hear any, for your information, but insist on your not replying. The Vice-Admiral of America<sup>4</sup> is a mere feather; but there is more substance in the notion of the Viceroy's quitting Ireland. Lord Bute and George Grenville are so ill together, that decency is scarce observed between their adherents; and the moment the former has an opportunity or resolution enough, he will remove the latter, and place his son-in-law<sup>5</sup> in the Treasury. This goes so far, that Charles Townshend, who is openly dedicated to Grenville, may possibly find himself disappointed, and get no place at last. However, I rejoice that we have got rid of him. It will tear up all connection

<sup>4</sup> That post had been conferred upon the Earl of Northumberland.

<sup>5</sup> Horace Walpole probably intended to refer to the father of Bute's son-in-law Lord Warkworth, the Earl of Northumberland, who was about this time proposed as First Lord of the Treasury by George III.

between him and your brother, root and branch: a circumstance you will not be more sorry for than I am. In the meantime, the opposition is so staunch that, I think, after the three questions on warrants, dismissal of officers, and the Manilla-money, I shall be at liberty to come to you, when I shall have a great deal to tell you. If Charles Townshend gets a place, Lord George Sackville expects another, by the same channel, interest, and connection; but if Charles may be disappointed himself, what may a man be who trusts to him? Adieu!

1006. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Jan. 27, 1765.

THE brother of your brother's neighbour, Mr. Freeman<sup>1</sup>, who is going to Paris, and I believe will not be sorry to be introduced to you, gives me an opportunity which I cannot resist, of sending you a private line or two, though I wrote you a long letter, which my sister was to put into the post at Calais two or three days ago.

We had a very remarkable day on Wednesday in the House of Commons,—very glorious for us, and very mortifying to the administration, especially to the principal performer, who was severely galled by our troops, and abandoned by his own. The business of the day was the army<sup>2</sup>, and, as nothing was expected, the House was not full. The very circumstance of nothing being expected, had encouraged Charles Townshend to soften a little what had passed on Monday; he grew profuse of his whispers and promises to us, and offered your brother to move the question on the dismissal of officers: the debate began;

LETTER 1006.—<sup>1</sup> Sambrook Freeman, of Fawley Court, Henley-on-Thames.

<sup>2</sup> The business was to vote the army for the year.

Beckford fell foul on the dismissions, and dropped some words on America<sup>3</sup>. Charles, who had placed himself again under the wing of Grenville, replied on American affairs; but totally forgot your brother. Beckford, in his boisterous Indian style, told Charles that on a single idea he had poured forth a diarrhœa of words. He could not stand it, and in two minutes fairly stole out of the House. This battery being dismantled, the whole attack fell on Grenville, and would have put you in mind of former days. You never heard any minister worse treated than he was for two hours together, by Tommy Townshend, Sir George Saville, and George Onslow,—and what was worse, no soul stepped forth in his defence, but Rigby and Lord Strange, the latter of whom was almost as much abashed as Charles Townshend; conscience flew in his black face, and almost turned it red. T. Townshend was still more bitter on Sandwich, whom he called a profligate fellow,—hoped he was present, and added, ‘if he is not, I am ready to call him so to his face in any private company’—even Rigby, his accomplice, said not a word in behalf of his brother culprit. You will wonder how all this ended—what would be the most ridiculous conclusion to such a scene? as you cannot imagine, I will tell you. Lord Harry Paulet<sup>4</sup> telling Grenville that if Lord Cobham was to rise from the dead, he would, if he could be ashamed of anything, be ashamed of him;—by the way, everybody believes he meant the apostrophe stronger than he expressed it: Grenville rose in a rage, like a basket-woman, and told Lord Harry that if he chose to use such language, he knew where to find him. Did you ever hear <sup>3</sup> ‘He mentioned . . . an expression dropped by Charles Townshend, which he said had made his ears tingle; it was that the Colonies were not to be emancipated.’ (Memoirs of George III., ed. 1894, vol. ii. p. 34.)

<sup>4</sup> Admiral Lord Harry Paulet (d. 1794), second son of fourth Duke of Bolton; succeeded his brother as sixth Duke in 1765.

of a Prime Minister, even soi-disant tel, challenging an opponent, when he could not answer him? Poor Lord Harry, too, was an unfortunate subject to exercise his valour upon! The House interposed; Lord Harry declared he should have expected Grenville to breakfast with him next morning; Grenville explained off and on two or three times, the Scotch laughed, the opposition roared, and the Treasury Bench sat as mute as fishes. Thus ended that wise Hudibrastic encounter. Grenville however, attended by every bad omen, provoked your brother, who had not intended to speak, by saying that some people had a good opinion of the dismissed officers, others had not. Your brother rose, and surpassed himself: he was very warm, though less so than on the first day; very decent in terms, but most severe in effect; he more than hinted at the threats that had been used to him,—said he would not reveal what was improper; yet left no mortal in the dark on that head. He called on the officers to assert their own freedom and independence. In short, made such a speech as silenced all his adversaries, but has filled the whole town with his praises: I believe, as soon as his speech reaches Hayes, it will contribute extremely to expel the gout, and bring Mr. Pitt to town, lest his presence should be no longer missed. Princess Amalie told me the next night, that if she had heard nothing of Mr. Conway's speech, she should have known how well he had done by my spirits. I was not sorry she made this reflection as I knew she would repeat it to Lady Waldegrave; and as I was willing that the Duchess of Bedford, who, when your brother was dismissed, asked the Duchess of Grafton if she was not sorry for poor Mr. Conway, who had lost everything, should recollect that it is they who have cause to lament that dismissal, not we.

There was a paragraph in Rigby's speech, and taken up, and adopted by Goody Grenville, which makes much noise, and, I suppose, has not given less offence; they talked of 'arbitrary Stuart principles,' which are supposed to have been aimed at the Stuart favourite; that breach is wider than ever:—not one of Lord Bute's adherents have opened their lips this session. I conclude a few of them will be ordered to speak on Friday; but unless we go on too triumphantly and reconcile them, I think this session will terminate Mr. Grenville's reign, and that of the Bedfords too, unless they make great submissions.

Do you know that Sir W. Pynsent had your brother in his eye! He said to his lawyer, 'I know Mr. Pitt is much younger than I am, but he has very bad health: as you will hear it before me, if he dies first, draw up another will with Mr. Conway's name instead of Mr. Pitt's, and bring it down to me directly.' I beg Britannia's pardon, but I fear I could have supported the loss on these grounds.

A very unhappy affair happened last night at the Star and Garter; Lord Byron killed a Mr. Chaworth<sup>5</sup> there in a duel. I know none of the particulars, and never believe the first reports.

My Lady Townshend was arrested two days ago in the street at the suit of a house-painter, who having brought her a bill double of the estimate he had given in, she would not pay it. As this is a breach of privilege, I should think the man would hear of it.

There is no day yet fixed for our intended motion on the dismissal of officers; but I believe Lord John Cavendish and Fitzroy will be the movers and seconders. Charles Townshend, we conclude, will be very ill that but discharged under the Statute of Privilege as a peer.

<sup>5</sup> William Chaworth, of Annesley, Nottinghamshire. Lord Byron was tried for manslaughter in April 1765,

day; if one could pity the poor toad, one should: there is jealousy of your brother,—fear of your brother,—fear of Mr. Pitt,—influence of his own brother,—connections entered into both with Lord Bute and Mr. Grenville, and a trimming plan concerted with Lord George Sackville and Charles Yorke, all tearing him or impelling him a thousand ways, with the addition of his own vanity and irresolution, and the contempt of everybody else. I dined with him yesterday at Mr. Mackinsy's, where his whole discourse was in ridicule of George Grenville.

The enclosed novel<sup>a</sup> is much in vogue; the author is not known, but if you should not happen to like it, I could give you a reason why you need not say so. There is nothing else new, but a play called The Platonic Wife, written by an Irish Mrs. Griffiths, which in charity to her was suffered to run three nights.

Since I wrote my letter, the following is the account nearest the truth that I can learn of the fatal duel last night: a club of Nottinghamshire gentlemen had dined at the Star and Garter, and there had been a dispute between the combatants, whether Lord Byron, who took no care of his game, or Mr. Chaworth, who was active in the association, had most game on their manor. The company, however, had apprehended no consequences, and parted at eight o'clock; but Lord Byron stepping into an empty chamber, and sending the drawer for Mr. Chaworth, or calling him thither himself, took the candle from the waiter, and bidding Mr. Chaworth defend himself, drew his sword. Mr. Chaworth, who was an excellent fencer, ran Lord Byron through the sleeve of his coat, and then received a wound fourteen inches deep into his body. He was carried to his house in Berkeley Street,—made his will with the greatest composure, and dictated a paper, which, they say, allows it was a fair duel, and died at nine this morning. Lord Byron is not gone off, but says he will take his trial, which, if the coroner brings in a verdict of manslaughter, may, according to precedent, be in the House of Lords, and without the ceremonial of Westminster Hall. George Selwyn is much missed on this occasion, but we conclude it will bring him over. I feel for both families, though I know none of either, but poor Lady Carlisle<sup>7</sup>, whom I am sure you will pity.

<sup>a</sup> The Castle of Otranto.

Our last three Saturdays at the Opera have been prodigious, and a new opera by Bach<sup>8</sup> last night was so crowded, that there were ladies standing behind the scenes during the whole performance. Adieu! my dear Lord: as this goes by a private hand, you may possibly receive its successor before it.

1007. TO THE REV. THOMAS PERCY<sup>1</sup>.

SIR,

Arlington Street, Feb. 5, 1765.

I have received from Mr. Dodsley the flattering and very agreeable present of the Reliques of Ancient Poetry; and though I have not had time yet to read the whole carefully, yet the transient perusal has given me so much pleasure, that I am impatient to make you my most grateful acknowledgements for so particular a favour. As I am personally unknown to you, Sir, I must regard it as a great distinction; and though you are so kind as to mark the cause of that distinction, I cannot help fearing that you are too partial to me even as an author, and that the honour you have in several places done to my Catalogue of Royal

<sup>7</sup> Sister of Lord Byron.

<sup>8</sup> Adriano in Siria.

LETTER 1007.—Not in C.; now first printed from original in British Museum.

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Percy (1729–1811), at this time Vicar of Easton Mauduit in Northamptonshire. Dean of Carlisle, 1778–82; Bishop of Dromore, 1782–1811. His Reliques of Ancient Poetry first appeared in 1765.

and Noble Authors, is much beyond what that compilation deserves. Since however that collection has merited your notice, may I not hope, Sir, that you will not confine it to my book, but that when you come to London, you will let me have the honour of your acquaintance?

Before I have the pleasure, that I promise myself, of talking over with you a thousand curious things in your new publication, permit me, Sir, to mention a few points that particularly struck me. The good sense and conciseness of your Dissertations persuade me that these are not your sole productions. I would not take the liberty to ask any impertinent questions, but you must allow me to hope that with so much knowledge, so accurate and judicious a talent for criticism, and so just a style, you will not confine yourself to this single publication nor to the mere office of an editor. Your observation on Lord Vaux<sup>2</sup> appears to me strongly founded. His poetry, as you remark, is undoubtedly more polished than is consonant to the age of Henry VII. You know my authorities, Sir, for ascribing those poems to Lord Nicholas: yet I prefer truth to any trifles of my own writing, and am willing to sacrifice my own account to what is more probable. If it is not too much to ask, I could wish, as I have little leisure, Sir, that you could ascertain this point for me, and even demonstrate to which specific Lord Vaux the poems belong. There is another of my Noble Authors, about whom I interest myself strangely; Lord Rochford<sup>3</sup>. Have you, Sir, in your researches ever met with any lines that you believe to be his?

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Vaux (1509-1556), second Baron Vaux de Harrowden, author of two of the poems printed in Percy's Reliques. One of these was attributed (on Antony Wood's authority) by Horace Walpole, in Royal and Noble Authors, to Lord Vaux's father, Nicholas Vaux, cr. Baron

Vaux de Harrowden three weeks before his death in 1528.

<sup>3</sup> George Boleyn, Viscount Rochford, eldest son of first Earl of Wiltshire, and brother of Queen Anne Boleyn, in whose disgrace he was involved. He was beheaded in 1536, two days before his sister.

I was not more pleased with anything than with your proofs, for so they certainly are, that Shakespeare's plays ought to be distinguished into Histories, Tragedies, and Comedies, and with your very just reflections on that subject. They are a full answer to all Voltaire's impertinent criticisms on our matchless poet.

The beginning of the second part of Sir Cauline, as no doubt, Sir, you have observed, resembles the story of Tancred and Sigismonda; as the ditty of Glasgerion seems evidently to have given birth to the tragedy of The Orphan<sup>4</sup>, in which Polidore profits of Monimia's intended favours to Castalio.

I will not make this first letter too long. With it I enclose an old ballad, which I write down from memory, and perhaps very incorrectly, for it is above five and twenty years since I learned it. I do not send it you, Sir, as worthy to be published, but merely as an addition to your collection, if it is not there already. I remember to have heard another which was the exact counterpart to it, called Giles Colin, but I do not recollect a single stanza.

If it should ever lie within my slender power to assist your studies or inquiries, I hope, Sir, you will command me. I love the cause, I have a passion for antiquity and literary amusements, and though I much doubt whether I shall ever engage in them again, farther than for my own private entertainment, I shall always be glad to contribute my mite to any gentleman, whose abilities and taste demand, like yours, to be encouraged.

I am, Sir,

Your much obliged

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

<sup>4</sup> By Thomas Otway.

I fare you well, Lady Hounsibelle<sup>5</sup>,
For I must needs be gone;
And this time two year I'll meet you again,
To end the true love we begun.
That's a long time, Lord Lovel, she said,
To dwell in fair Scotland:
And so it is, Lady Hounsibelle,
And to leave a fair lady alone.
He called unto his stable-groom
To saddle his milk-white steed.
Hey down, Hey down, Hey, hey derry down,
I wish my Lord Lovel good speed.
He had not been in fair Scotland
Above half a year,
But a longing mind came over his head
Lady Hounsibelle he would go see her.
He had not been in fair London
Above half a day,
But he heard the bells of the high chapel ring;
They rung with a Sesora.
He asked of a gentleman
That stood there all alone,
What made the bells of the high chapel ring,
And the ladies to make such a moan.
The King's fair daughter is dead, he said,
Whose name's Lady Hounsibelle;
She died for love of a courteous young knight,
Whose name it is Lord Lovel.
Lady Hounsibelle died on the Easter Day,
Lord Lovel on the morrow;
Lady Hounsibelle died for pure true love,
Lord Lovel he died for sorrow.
Lady Hounsibelle's buried in the chancel,
Lord Lovel in the choir;
Lady Hounsibelle's breast sprung up a rose,
Lord Lovel's a branch of sweetbriar.
They grew till they grew to the top of the church,
And when they could grow no higher
They grew till they grew to a true lover's knot,
And they both were tied together.

<sup>5</sup> Enclosed in the preceding letter, on a separate sheet.

There came an old woman by
Their blessing she did crave;
She cut her a branch of this true lover's knot,
And buried 'em both in a grave.

1008. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Feb. 11, 1765.

You have, no doubt, expected to hear from me for some time; but every week does not produce events, nor every session revolutions. We have had but one remarkable day since my last letter to you. It was on the old, but important question of general warrants; and if it is remembered, it will be owing more to the weight of the subject than to the discussion. We sat till near six in the morning; but as the debate had been so exhausted last year, and has been so agitated in print ever since, you cannot marvel if it produced little new. The numbers on the division were 224 to 185. I expected that we of the minority should be fewer, considering the deaths, accidents, and desertions that have happened. It is even comfortable to find that there are one hundred and eighty-five men who prefer anything to their interest; and though beaten, we extorted an universal confession that general warrants are illegal; what excuse they who made this confession left to themselves for not going farther, let their posterity tell by their blushes! One man, indeed, there was who had the front not to condemn himself in the same manner, I mean Norton the Attorney-General—when he stabs a parent, he does not, like Brutus, cover his face. The hero of the day was the famous Colonel Barré—a man, or I am mistaken, whose fame will not stop here. He spoke with infinite wit and humour, and with that first of merits to me, novelty: his manner is original. He spoke too with extreme bitterness, which is almost new again; so civil have Parliaments been of late. He commended the present Secretaries of State, but foresaw it possible that, if one of them should die, his successor might be the most dissolute and abandoned sad dog in the kingdom. There sat Sandwich under the gallery, while the whole House applied the picture to him! not a word was offered in his defence. You will ask if he was thunderstruck? yes, say those who were near him. Yet so well did he recover the blow that at three in the morning, he commenced an intrigue with a coffee-girl, who attends in the Speaker's chambers<sup>1</sup>.

Mr. Pitt, whom we begin to know only by tradition, was laid up with the gout; so he is still, which postpones any farther questions from the opposition, as he has deigned to promise his countenance, if he can get to town. You have seen in all the papers the great fortune that has been left to him by Sir William Pynsent, an old Whig baronet, who quitted the world on the treaty of Utrecht, and lived to pass this just censure on its counterpart, the treaty of Paris. 'Tis a noble testimonial; and yet, if vice and virtue fight with the same weapon, gold, I fear the odds will be on the side of the former! Few sad dogs will wait for last wills and testaments.

We are likely to have another solemn puppet-show, the trial of a peer. Lord Byron has killed a Mr. Chaworth in a duel at a tavern. I, who should like the trial of a Laud or a Strafford, as a wholesome spectacle now and then, am not interested about an obscure lord, whose birth alone procures his being treated like an overgrown criminal. This quarrel was about game; and the very topic should send it to the Quarter Sessions.

Lord Milton has desired me to make his and my Lady's acknowledgements to you for your civilities to Mr. Damer<sup>2</sup>. I was desired too, to mention to you the future arrival of Earl Berkeley<sup>3</sup>; but I do not know him, nor trouble my head about him. You are attention itself to everybody; an Earl would naturally not escape you: that is full enough.

LETTER 1008.—<sup>1</sup> Passage modified by Lord Dover.

You will ask when I go to Paris? It is the question I ask my friends every day. Probably now not till the Parliament rises, as the session is likely to end by Easter. At present I am confined with a bad cold, which I increased at our late day—and a fever; but as I shall take James's powder to-night, you may be sure that I shall be quite well to-morrow. Adieu!

1009. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Feb. 12, 1765.

A GREAT many letters pass between us, my dear Lord, but I think they are almost all of my writing. I have not heard from you this age. I sent you two packets together by Mr. Freeman, with an account of our chief debates. Since the long day, I have been much out of order with a cold and cough, that turned to a fever: I am now taking James's powder, not without apprehensions of the gout, which it gave me two or three years ago.

There has been nothing of note in Parliament but one slight day on the American taxes<sup>1</sup>, which, Charles Townshend supporting, received a pretty heavy thump from <sup>2</sup> Hon. John Damer, eldest son of first Baron Milton. In 1767 he married Anne, only daughter of General Conway. Nine years later, having contracted enormous debts which his father refused to pay, he shot himself in a tavern in Covent Garden.

<sup>3</sup> Frederick Augustus Berkeley (1745–1810), fifth Earl of Berkeley.

LETTER 1009.—<sup>1</sup> On Feb. 6, 1765, Grenville proposed 'a series of fifty-five resolutions, imposing on America nearly the same stamp duties which were then established in England.' (D. N. B.)

Barré, who is the present Pitt, and the dread of all the vociferous Norths and Rigbys, on whose lungs depended so much of Mr. Grenville's power. Do you never hear them to Paris?

The operations of the opposition are suspended in compliment to Mr. Pitt, who has declared himself so warmly for the question on the dismissal of officers, that that motion waits for his recovery. A call of the House is appointed for next Wednesday, but as he has had a relapse, the motion will probably be deferred. I should be very glad if it was to be dropped entirely for this session, but the young men are warm and not easily bridled.

If it was not too long to transcribe, I would send you an entertaining petition<sup>2</sup> of the periwig-makers to the King, in which they complain that men will wear their own hair. Should one almost wonder if carpenters were to remonstrate, that since the Peace their trade decays, and that there is no demand for wooden legs? Apropos, my Lady Hertford's friend, Lady Harriot Vernon<sup>3</sup>, has quarrelled with me for smiling at the enormous headgear of her daughter, Lady Grosvenor<sup>4</sup>. She came one night to Northumberland House with such display of friz, that it literally spread beyond her shoulders. I happened to say it looked as if her parents had stinted her in hair before marriage, and that she was determined to indulge her fancy now. This, among ten thousand things said by all the world, was reported to Lady Harriot, and has occasioned my disgrace. As she never found fault with anybody herself, I excuse her! You will be less surprised to hear

<sup>2</sup> See Gent. Mag. 1765, p. 95.

<sup>3</sup> Lady Harriet Wentworth, second daughter of first Earl of Strafford; m. (1748) Henry Vernon, of Hilton Park, Staffordshire.

<sup>4</sup> Henrietta Vernon (d. 1828); m. 1. (1764) Richard, first Baron (afterwards first Earl) Grosvenor (from whom she was divorced in 1770, in consequence of an intrigue with the Duke of Cumberland, brother of George III); 2. (1802) Lieutenant-General George Porter, afterwards Baron de Hochepeid.

that the Duchess of Queensberry has not yet done dressing herself marvellously: she was at court on Sunday in a gown and petticoat of red flannel. The same day the Guerchys made a dinner for her, and invited Lord and Lady Hyde<sup>5</sup>, the Forbes's<sup>6</sup>, and her other particular friends: in the morning she sent word she was to go out of town, but as soon as dinner was over, arrived at Madame de Guerchy's, and said she had been at court.

Poor Madame de Seillern, the imperial ambassadress, has lost her only daughter and favourite child, a young widow of twenty-two, whom she was expecting from Vienna. The news came but this day se'nnight; and the ambassador, who is as brutal as she is gentle and amiable, has insisted on her having company at dinner to-day, and her assembly as usual.

The town says that Lord and Lady Abergavenny are parted, and that he has not been much milder than Monsieur de Seillern on the chapter of a mistress he has taken. I don't know the truth of this; but his Lordship's heart, I believe, is more inflammable than tender.

Lady Sophia Thomas has begged me to trouble you with a small commission. It is to send me for her twelve little bottles of 'le Baume de Vie, composé par le Sieur Lievre, apoticaire distillateur du Roi.' If George Selwyn or Lord March are not set out, they would bring it with pleasure, especially as she lives at the Duke of Queensberry's.

We have not a new book, play, intrigue, marriage, elopement, or quarrel; in short, we are very dull. For politics, unless the ministers wantonly thrust their hands into some fire, I think there will not even be a smoke. I am glad of it, for my heart is set on my journey to Paris, and I hate everything that stops me. Lord Byron's foolish trial is likely to protract the session a little; but unless there is any particular business, I shall not stay for a puppet-show. Indeed, I can defend my staying here by nothing but my ties to your brother. My health, I am sure, would be better in another climate in winter. Long days in the House kill me, and weary me into the bargain. The individuals of each party are alike indifferent to me; nor can I at this time of day grow to love men whom I have laughed at all my lifetime—no, I cannot alter;—Charles Yorke or a Charles Townshend are alike to me, whether ministers or Patriots. Men do not change in my eyes, because they quit a black livery for a white one. When one has seen the whole scene shifted round and round so often, one only smiles, whoever is the present Polonius or the Gravedigger, whether they jeer the Prince, or flatter his frenzy.

<sup>5</sup> Lady Charlotte Capel (d. 1790), daughter of third Earl of Essex; m. (1752) Hon. Thomas Villiers, afterwards Baron Hyde and Earl of Clarendon. She was niece of the Duchess of Queensberry.

<sup>6</sup> Admiral and Lady Mary Forbes. The latter was a sister of Lady Hyde.

Thursday night, 14th.

The new Assembly Room at Almack's was opened the night before last, and they say is very magnificent, but it was empty; half the town is ill with colds, and many were afraid to go, as the house is scarcely built yet. Almack advertised that it was built with hot bricks and boiling water—think what a rage there must be for public places, if this notice, instead of terrifying, could draw anybody thither. They tell me the ceilings were dropping with wet—but can you believe me, when I assure you the Duke of Cumberland was there?—Nay, had had a levee in the morning, and went to the Opera before the assembly! There is a vast flight of steps, and he was forced to rest two or three times. If he dies of it,—and how should he not?—it will sound very silly when Hercules or Theseus ask him what he died of, to reply, 'I caught my death on a damp staircase at a new club-room.'

Williams, the reprinter of the North Briton, stood in the pillory to-day in Palace Yard. He went in a hackney-coach, the number of which was 45. The mob erected a gallows opposite to him, on which they hung a boot with a bonnet of straw. Then a collection was made for Williams, which amounted to near 200*l*. In short, every public event informs the administration how thoroughly they are detested, and that they have not a friend whom they do not buy. Who can wonder, when every man of virtue is proscribed, and they have neither parts nor characters to impose even upon the mob! Think to what a government is sunk, when a Secretary of State is called in Parliament to his face 'the most profligate sad dog in the kingdom,' and not a man can open his lips in his defence. Sure power must have some strange unknown charm, when it can compensate for such contempt! I see many who triumph in these bitter pills which the ministry are so often forced to swallow; I own I do not; it is more mortifying to me to reflect how great and respectable we were three years ago, than satisfactory to see those insulted who have brought such shame upon us. 'Tis poor amends to national honour to know, that if a printer is set in the pillory, his country wishes it was my Lord This, or Mr. That. They will be gathered to the Oxfords, and Bolingbokes, and ignominious of former days; but the wound they have inflicted is perhaps indelible. That goes to my heart, who had felt all the Roman pride of being one of the first nations upon earth!—Good night!—I will go to bed, and dream of Kings drawn in triumph; and then I will go to Paris, and dream I am pro-consul there: pray, take care not to let me be awakened with an account of an invasion having taken place from Dunkirk!

Yours ever,

H. W.

1010. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, Feb. 19, 1765.

YOUR health and spirits and youth delight me ; yet I think you make but a bad use of them, when you destine them to a trist house in a country solitude. If you were condemned to retirement, it would be fortunate to have spirits to support it ; but great vivacity is not a cause for making it one's option.

Why waste your sweetness on the desert air ? at least, why bestow so little of your cheerfulness on your friends ?

I do not wish you to parade your rubicundity and grey hairs through the mobs and assemblies of London ; I should think you bestowed them as ill as on Greatworth ; but you might find a few rational creatures here, who are heartily tired of what are called our pleasures, and who would be glad to have you in their chimney-corner. There you might have found me any time this fortnight ; I have been dying of the worst and longest cold I ever had in my days, and have been blooded, and taken James's powder to no purpose. I look almost like the skeleton that Frederick found in the oratory<sup>1</sup>. My only comfort was, that I should have owed my death to the long day in the House of Commons, and have perished with our liberties—but I think I am getting the better of my martyrdom, and shall live to see you. Nay, I shall not be gone to Paris. As I design that journey for the term of my figuring in the world, I would fain wind up my politics too, and quit all public ties together. As I am not old yet, and have an excellent though delicate constitution, I may promise myself some agreeable years, if I could detach myself from all connections, but with a very few persons that I value.

LETTER 1010.—<sup>1</sup> Alluding to an incident in The Castle of Otranto.

Oh! with what joy I could bid adieu to loving and hating! to crowds, public places, great dinners, visits—and above all, to the House of Commons!—but pray mind, when I retire, it shall only be to London and Strawberry Hill—in London one can live as one will, and at Strawberry I will live as I will. Apropos, my good old tenant Frankland is dead, and I am in possession of his cottage, which will be a delightfully additional plaything at Strawberry. I shall be violently tempted to stick in a few cypresses and lilacs there, before I go to Paris.

I don't know a jot of news; I have been a perfect hermit this fortnight, and buried in Runic poetry and Danish wars. In short, I have been deep in a late history of Denmark, written by one Mallet<sup>2</sup>, a Frenchman, a sensible man, but I cannot say he has the art of making a very tiresome subject agreeable.—There are six volumes, and I am stuck fast in the fourth.

Lord Byron's trial I hear is to be in May. If you are curious about it, I can secure you a ticket for Lord Lincoln's gallery.

The Antiquarian Society have got Goody Carlisle<sup>3</sup> for their President, and I suppose she will sit upon a Saxon chalkstone till the return of King Arthur. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

1011. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Feb. 28, 1765.

As you do not deal with newspapers, nor trouble yourself with occurrences of modern times, you may perhaps conclude from what I told you, and from my silence, that I am in France. This will tell you that I am not, though I have been long thinking of it, and still intend it, though not a native of Geneva.

<sup>2</sup> Paul Henri Mallet (1730-1807),

<sup>3</sup> Charles Lyttelton, Bishop of Carlisle.

exactly yet. My silence I must lay upon this uncertainty, and from having been much out of order above a month with a very bad cold and cough, for which I am come hither to try change of air. Your brother Apthorpe<sup>1</sup>, who was so good as to call upon me about a fortnight ago in town, found me too hoarse almost to speak to him. We both asked one another the same question—news of you?

You have, I hope, got rid of all trouble from your impertinent neighbour, and reverted to the tranquillity you love.

I have for some time had the pictures from Dr. Cock, and shall have the one engraved that I conclude your ancestor, though there seem to be no very accurate marks to specify it.

I have lately had an accession to my territory here, by the death of good old Frankland, to whom I had given for his life the lease of the cottage and garden 'cross the road. Besides a little pleasure in planting and in crowding it with flowers, I intend to make, what I am sure you are antiquarian enough to approve, a bower, though your friends the abbots did not indulge in such retreats, at least not under that appellation; but though we love the same ages, you must excuse worldly me for preferring the romantic scenes of antiquity. If you will tell me how to send it, and are partial enough to me to read a profane work in the style of former centuries, I shall convey to you a little story-book, which I published some time ago, though not boldly with my own name; but it has succeeded so well, that I do not any longer entirely keep the secret: does the title The Castle of Otranto tempt you?

I shall be glad to hear you are well and happy, and am

Ever yours,

HOR. WALPOLE.

Pray direct your answer to Arlington Street.

LETTER 1011.—<sup>1</sup> Dr. Stephen Apthorpe, son of Cole's mother by a former marriage.

1012. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, March 9, 1765.

I had time to write but a short note with the Castle of Otranto, as your messenger called on me at four o'clock, as I was going to dine abroad. Your partiality to me and Strawberry have, I hope, inclined you to excuse the wildness of the story. You will even have found some traits to put you in mind of this place. When you read of the picture quitting its panel, did not you recollect the portrait of Lord Falkland<sup>1</sup>, all in white, in my gallery? Shall I even confess to you, what was the origin of this romance? I waked one morning in the beginning of last June, from a dream, of which, all I could recover was, that I had thought myself in an ancient castle (a very natural dream for a head filled like mine with Gothic story), and that on the uppermost banister of a great staircase I saw a gigantic hand in armour. In the evening I sat down, and began to write, without knowing in the least what I intended to say or relate. The work grew on my hands, and I grew fond of it—add that I was very glad to think of anything, rather than politics—in short, I was so engrossed with my tale, which I completed in less than two months, that one evening, I wrote from the time I had drunk my tea, about six o'clock, till half an hour after one in the morning, when my hand and fingers were so weary, that I could not hold the pen to finish the sentence, but left Matilda and Isabella talking, in the middle of a paragraph. You will laugh at my earnestness, but if I have amused you, by retracing with any fidelity the manners of ancient days, I am content, and give you leave to think me as idle as you please.

LETTER 1012.—<sup>1</sup> Henry Cary (d. 1633), first Viscount Falkland; Lord Deputy of Ireland, 1622-29. The picture was by Van Somer.

You are, as you have long been to me, exceedingly kind, and I should, with great satisfaction, embrace your offer of visiting the solitude of Blecheley, though my cold is in a manner gone, and my cough quite, if I was at liberty : but as I am preparing for my French journey, I have forty businesses upon my hands, and can only now and then purloin a day, or half a day, to come hither. You know I am not cordially disposed to your French journey, which is much more serious, as it is to be much more lasting. However, though I may suffer by your absence, I would not dissuade what may suit your inclination and circumstances. One thing, however, has struck me, which I must mention, though it would depend on a circumstance that would give me the most real concern. It was suggested to me by that real fondness I have for your MSS., for your kindness about which I feel the utmost gratitude. You would not, I think, leave them behind you ; and are you aware of the danger they would run, if you settled entirely in France ? Do you know that the King of France is heir to all strangers who die in his dominions, by what they call the Droit d'Aubaine ? Sometimes by great interest and favour, persons have obtained a remission of this right in their lifetime ; and yet that, even that, has not secured their effects from being embezzled. Old Lady Sandwich had obtained this remission, and yet, though she left everything to the present Lord, her grandson, a man for whose rank one should have thought they would have had regard, the King's officers forced themselves into her house, after her death, and plundered. You see, if you go, I shall expect to have your MSS. deposited with me—seriously, you must leave them in safe custody behind you.

Lord Essex's trial is printed with the State Trials. In return for your obliging offer, I can acquaint you with a delightful publication of this winter, a collection of old ballads and poetry<sup>2</sup>, in three volumes, many from Pepys's collection at Cambridge. There were three such published between thirty and forty years ago, but very carelessly, and wanting many in this set: indeed, there were others, of a looser sort, which the present editor, who is a clergyman, thought it decent to omit.

When you go into Cheshire, and upon your ramble, may I trouble you with a commission, but about which you must promise me not to go a step out of your way. Mr. Bateman has got a cloister at Old Windsor, furnished with ancient wooden chairs, most of them triangular, but all of various patterns, and carved and turned in the most uncouth and whimsical forms. He picked them up one by one, for two, three, five, or six shillings apiece, from different farmhouses in Herefordshire. I have long envied and coveted them. There may be such in poor cottages in so neighbouring a county as Cheshire. I should not grudge any expense for purchase or carriage; and should be glad even of a couple such for my cloister here. When you are copying inscriptions in a churchyard in any village, think of me, and step into the first cottage you see—but don't take farther trouble than that. I long to know what your bundle of manuscripts from Cheshire contains.

My bower is determined, but not at all what it is to be. Though I write romances, I cannot tell how to build all that belongs to them. Madame Danois<sup>3</sup>, in the Fairy Tales, used to tapestry them with jonquils; but as that furniture will not last above a fortnight in the year, I shall prefer something more huckaback. I have decided that the outside shall be of treillage, which, however, I shall not commence, till I have again seen some of old Louis's old-fashioned galanteries at Versailles. Rosamond's bower, you, and I, and Tom Hearne know, was a labyrinth, but as my territory will admit of a very short clew, I lay aside all thoughts of a mazy habitation; though a bower is very different from an harbour, and must have more chambers than one. In short, I both know, and don't know, what it should be. I am almost afraid I must go and read Spenser, and wade through his allegories, and drawling stanzas, to get at a picture—but, good night! you see how one gossips, when one is alone, and at quiet on one's own dunghill!—well! it may be trifling, yet it is such trifling as Ambition never is happy enough to know! Ambition orders palaces, but it is Content that chats for a page or two over a bower.

<sup>2</sup> Percy's Reliques.

<sup>3</sup> Marie Catherine Jumelle de

Berneville (d. 1705), Comtesse d'Aulnoy or Aulnoy, writer of fairy tales.

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

1013. TO DR. WARTON<sup>1</sup>.

SIR,

Arlington Street, March 16, 1765.

You have shown so much of what I fear I must call partiality to me, that I could not in conscience send you the trifle<sup>2</sup> that accompanies this till the unbiased public, who knew not the author, told me that it was not quite unworthy of being offered to you. Still I am not quite sure whether its ambition of copying the manners of an age which you love, may not make you too favourable to it, or whether its awkward imitation of them may not subject it to your censure. In fact, it is but partially an imitation of ancient romances; being rather intended for an attempt to blend the marvellous of old story with the natural of modern novels. This was in great measure the plan of a work, which, to say the truth, was begun without any LETTER 1013.—<sup>1</sup> Joseph Warton (1722–1800), at this time second master of Winchester School. He became Head Master in 1766. In 1757 he published the first volume of his Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope.

<sup>2</sup> The Castle of Otranto.

plan at all. But I will not trouble you, Sir, at present with enlarging on my design, which I have fully explained in a preface prepared for a second edition, which the sale of the former makes me in an hurry to send out. I do not doubt, Sir, but you have with pleasure looked over more genuine remains of ancient days, the three volumes of old poems and ballads: most of them are curious, and some charming. The dissertations too I think are sensible, concise, and unaffected. Let me recommend to you also the perusal of the Life of Petrarch, of which two large volumes in quarto are already published by the Abbé de Sade, with the promise of a third. Three quartos on Petrarch will not terrify a man of your curiosity, though without omitting the memoirs and anecdotes of Petrarch's age, the most valuable part of the work, they might have been comprised in much less compass: many of the sonnets might have been sunk, and almost all his translations of them. Though Petrarch appears to have been far from a genius, singly excepting the harmonious beauty of his words, yet one forgives the partiality of a biographer, though Monsieur de Sade seems so much enchanted with Petrarch as the age was in which he lived, whilst their ignorance of good authors excuses their bigotry to the restorer of taste. You will not, I believe, be so thoroughly convinced as the biographer seems to be, of the authentic discovery of Laura's body, and the sonnet placed on her bosom. When a lady dies of the plague in the height of its ravages, it is not very probable that her family thought of interring poetry with her, or indeed of anything but burying her body as quickly as they could; nor is it more likely that a pestilential vault was opened afterwards for that purpose. I have no doubt but that the sonnet was prepared and slipped into the tomb when they were determined to find her corpse. When you read the notes to the second volume, you will grow very impatient for Mons. de St. Palaye's<sup>3</sup> promised History of the Troubadours. Have we any manuscript that could throw light on that subject?

I cannot conclude, Sir, without reminding you of a hope you once gave me of seeing you in town or at Strawberry Hill. I go to Paris the end of May or beginning of June, for a few months, where I should be happy if I could execute any literary commission for you.

1014. TO ÉLIE DE BEAUMONT.

SIR,

Strawberry Hill, March 18, 1765.

When I had the honour of seeing you here, I believe I told you that I had written a novel, in which I was flattered to find that I had touched an effusion of the heart in a manner similar to a passage in the charming Letters of the Marquis de Roselle. I have since that time published my little story, but was so diffident of its merit, that I gave it as a translation from the Italian<sup>1</sup>. Still I should not have ventured to offer it to so great a mistress of the passions as Madame de Beaumont, if the approbation of London, that is, of a country to which she and you, Sir, are so good as to be partial, had not encouraged me to send it to you. After I have talked of the passions, and the natural effusions of the heart, how will you be surprised to find a narrative of the most improbable and absurd adventures? How will you be amazed to hear that a country of whose good sense you have an opinion should have applauded so wild a tale! But you must remember, Sir, that whatever good sense we have, we are not yet in any light chained down to precepts and inviolable laws. All that Aristotle or his superior commentators, your authors, have taught us, has not yet subdued us to regularity: we still prefer the extravagant beauties of Shakespeare and Milton to the cold and well-disciplined merit of Addison, and even to the sober and correct march of Pope. Nay, it was but t'other day that we were transported to hear Churchill rave in numbers less chastised than Dryden's, but still in numbers like Dryden's. You will not, I hope, think I apply these mighty names to my own case with any vanity, when it is only their enormities that I quote, and that in defence, not of myself, but of my countrymen, who have had good humour enough to approve the visionary scenes and actors in the Castle of Otranto.

<sup>3</sup> Jean-Baptiste de la Curne de Sainte-Palaye (1697-1781). Millot's History of the Troubadours was founded upon his Mémoires sur l'ancienne Chevalerie, published in 1781.

LETTER 1014. — <sup>1</sup> The Castle of

Otranto was described as 'translated by William Marshal, Gent., from the original Italian of Onuphrio Muralto, Canon of the church of St. Nicholas at Otranto.'

To tell you the truth, it was not so much my intention to recall the exploded marvels of ancient romance, as to blend the wonderful of old stories with the natural of modern novels. The world is apt to wear out any plan whatever; and if the Marquis de Roselle had not appeared, I should have been inclined to say that that species had been exhausted. Madame de Beaumont must forgive me if I add that Richardson had, to me at least, made that kind of writing insupportable. I thought the nodus was become dignus vindice, and that a god, at least a ghost, was absolutely necessary to frighten us out of too much senses. When I had so wicked a design, no wonder if the execution was answerable. If I make you laugh, for I cannot flatter myself that I shall make you cry, I shall be content; at least I shall be satisfied, till I have the pleasure of seeing you, with putting you in mind of, Sir, your most devoted humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

P.S. The passage I alluded to in the beginning of my letter is where Matilda owns her passion to Hippolita.

have pleased me more, though I allow not in so many parts. Quin in Falstaff was as excellent as Garrick in Lear. Old Johnson<sup>6</sup> far more natural in everything he attempted. Mrs. Porter<sup>7</sup> and your Dumesnil<sup>8</sup> surpassed him in passionate tragedy; Cibber and O'Brien were what Garrick could never reach, coxcombs, and men of fashion. Mrs. Clive is at least as perfect in low comedy—and yet to me, Ranger was the part that suited Garrick the best of all he ever performed. He was a poor Lothario, a ridiculous Othello, inferior to Quin in Sir John Brute and Macbeth, and to Cibber in Bayes, and a woful Lord Hastings and Lord Townley. Indeed, his Bayes was original, but not the true part: Cibber was the burlesque of a great poet, as the part was designed, but Garrick made it a garreteer. The town did not like him in Hotspur, and yet I don't know whether he did not succeed in it beyond all the rest. Sir Charles Williams and Lord Holland thought so too, and they were no bad judges. I am impatient to see the Clairon, and certainly will, as I have promised, though I have not fixed my day. But do you know you alarm me! There was a time when I was a match for Madame de Mirepoix at pharaoh, to any hour of the night, and I believe did play with her five nights in a week till three and four in the morning—but till eleven o'clock to-morrow morning—oh! that is a little too much, even at loo. Besides, I shall not go to Paris for pharaoh—if I play all night, how shall I see everything all day?

Lady Sophia Thomas has received the Baume de Vie, for which she gives you a thousand thanks, and I ten thousand.

We are extremely amused with the wonderful histories of your hyena in the Gevaudan<sup>9</sup>; but our fox-hunters despise you: it is exactly the enchanted monster of old romances. If I had known its history a few months ago, I believe it would have appeared in the Castle of Otranto,—the success of which has, at last, brought me to own it, though the wildness of it made me terribly afraid; but it was comfortable to have it please so much, before any mortal suspected the author: indeed, it met with too much honour far, for at first it was universally believed to be Mr. Gray's. As all the first impression is sold, I am hurrying out another, with a new preface, which I will send you.

<sup>6</sup> Benjamin Johnson; d. 1742.

<sup>7</sup> Mary Porter; she retired from the stage in 1743, and died in 1765.

<sup>8</sup> Marie Françoise Dumesnil (1711–1803).

There is not so much delicacy of wit as in M. de Choiseul's speech to the Clairon, but I think the story I am going to tell you in return will divert you as much: there was a vast assembly at Marlborough House, and a throng in the doorway. My Lady Talbot said, 'Bless me! I think this is like the Straits of Thermopylæ!' My Lady Northumberland replied, 'I don't know what Street that is, but I wish I could get my — through.' I hope you admire the contrast. Adieu! my dear Lord!

Yours ever.

1016. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, March 26, 1765.

I DON'T remember the day when I was reduced to complain, in winter and Parliament-tide, of having nothing to say. Yet it is this kind of nothing that has occasioned my long silence. There has not been an event, from a debate to a wedding, capable of making a paragraph. Such calms often forerun storms: the worst fits of the gout befall those who are not subject to little fevers.

Our eyes have been lately turned to very serious danger;

<sup>9</sup> An unusually large wolf, which caused a panic in Gevaudan (a district of Lower Languedoc). It was killed in October 1765.

the King has been extremely ill, with a fever, violent cough, and a humour fallen on his breast. He was blooded four times, recovered enough to take the air, but caught new cold, and was cupped last Friday. However, he has been out in his chaise every day since, and we trust the danger is over; though I doubt he is not quite well. You will shudder at the idea of such a long minority at such a time, and not wonder if all parties were equally alarmed. The Duke of Cumberland's state is less precarious, as his fate more certain, and verging fast to a conclusion; yet he has ordered his equipages for Newmarket, and persists in going thither if he is alive; he seems indifferent both where he dies, and when.

This is absolutely the whole of my public gazette. Nor have I anything private to tell you. I can only talk over an affair in which I can give you no satisfaction, that of Mr. Whithed's legacy. Poor Mr. Chute has been in bed with the gout a month to-morrow and has suffered martyrdom. If he was well I do not see what he could do. The parson Thistlethwaite is the most impracticable of all brutes, and adheres as obstinately to every tittle and subtlety of the law, as if it was the Bible, and with as little shame. I am pushing your brother to war with him, and nothing that such impotent endeavours as mine can do, shall be wanting.

We have got the renowned Schouvaloff<sup>1</sup> here; he does not answer my expectation, whatever he did the late Czarina's—that is, he is large, and not handsome. We expect Lord Buckingham every hour, who has been at the Hague some time, where he hovers on the wings of a husband, not of a lover. Perhaps you wonder more at my being still here: I have now fixed the first of June for LETTER 1016.—<sup>1</sup> Count Schouvaloff, favourite and supposed husband of the Czarina Elizabeth. He was a most worthy man, and though he enjoyed absolute power for twelve years, did not do an injury or make an enemy. Walpole.

my journey to Paris, for having advanced so far towards the spring, I cannot resign lilac-tide and the month of May at Strawberry Hill. I do not propose passing Paris, nor shall break a spear against the wild beast<sup>2</sup> in the Gevaudan, which the French seem as much afraid of as if the soul of Mr. Pitt had transmigrated into a hyena. The peasants believe it to be a sorcerer, and one of them swears that it said to him as it leaped a river, 'N'est-ce pas assez bien sauter pour un homme de quatre-vingt ans?'—Pray set this against our ghost in Cock Lane; then cast up the two accounts, and tell me how much this age is enlightened! How little Sir Isaac Newton thought that in little more than thirty years he should be less talked of than a second Dragon of Wantley!

What part does Wilkes take at Rome? Does he condescend, like Lord Bolingbroke, to be first minister to the Pretender? or does he give the Pope the lie, and tell him that the Jesuits deserved to be annihilated? or will he, like Bonneval and Ripperda<sup>3</sup>, turn Mussulman at last? Lord Temple is a caput mortuum since Churchill died and Wilkes was banished. But this state of inaction cannot last; England must sail into another latitude, before it ceases to produce extraordinary head-pieces. I could comment at large on this text, but I may as well dismiss you, as write revelations instead of a letter. Good night!

<sup>2</sup> Prodigious was the noise made about that beast, which was believed to be really some famished or mad wolves. At last, in the following summer, a very large one was killed by a peasant and carried to Versailles, where I saw it in the Queen's antechamber, and the peasant who killed it, as if it had been a public enemy! Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Claude Alexandre (1670-1745),

Comte de Bonneval, and Jean Guillaume (d. 1747), Baron de Ripperda. The former took refuge in Turkey to avoid imprisonment, and entered the Turkish army; the latter, after a brief career as virtual Prime Minister of Philip V of Spain, was disgraced and imprisoned, but, escaping from Spain, occupied for some years an important post at the court of the Sultan of Morocco.

1017. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, April 5, 1765.

I SENT you two letters t'other day from your kin, and might as well have writ then as now, for I have nothing new to tell you. Mr. Chute has quitted his bed to-day, the first time for above five weeks, but is still swathed like a mummy. He was near relapsing, for old Mildmay<sup>1</sup>, whose lungs, and memory, and tongue, will never wear out, talked to him t'other night from eight till half an hour after ten, on the Poor Bill; but he has been more comfortable with Lord Dacre and me this evening.

I have read the Siege of Calais, and dislike it extremely, though there are fine lines, but the conduct is woful. The outrageous applause it has received at Paris was certainly political, and intended to spur up their spirit and animosity against us, their good, merciful, and forgiving allies. They will have no occasion for this ardour; they may smite one cheek, and we shall turn t'other.

Though I have little to say, it is worth while to write, only to tell you two bons mots of Quin to that turn-coat hypocritic infidel, Bishop Warburton. That saucy priest was haranguing at Bath in behalf of prerogative: Quin said, 'Pray, my Lord, spare me; you are not acquainted with my principles: I am a republican; and perhaps I even think that the execution of Charles the First might be justified.'—'Ay!' said Warburton, 'by what law?' Quin replied, 'By all the laws he had left them.' The Bishop would have got off upon judgements, and bade the player remember that all the regicides came to violent ends—a lie, but no matter. 'I would not advise your Lordship,' said Quin, LETTER 1017.—<sup>1</sup> Probably Carew Hervey Mildmay, of Shawford House, Hampshire.

‘to make use of that inference ; for, if I am not mistaken, that was the case of the twelve apostles.’ There was great wit ad hominem in the latter reply, but I think the former equal to anything I ever heard. It is the sum of the whole controversy couched in eight monosyllables, and comprehends at once the King’s guilt and the justice of punishing it. The more one examines it, the finer it proves. One can say nothing after it : so good night !

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

1018. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Strawberry Hill, Easter Sunday, April 7, 1765.

YOUR first wish will be to know how the King does : he came to Richmond last Monday for a week ; but appeared suddenly and unexpected at his levee at St. James’s last Wednesday ; this was managed to prevent a crowd. Next day he was at the Drawing-room, and at chapel on Good Friday. They say, he looks pale ; but it is the fashion to call him very well :—I wish it may be true. The Duke of Cumberland is actually set out for Newmarket to-day, he too is called much better ; but it is often as true of the health of princes as of their prisons, that there is little distance between each and their graves. There has been a fire at Gunnersbury<sup>1</sup>, which burned four rooms : her servants announced it to Princess Amalie with that wise precaution of ‘Madam, don’t be frightened !——’ accordingly, she was terrified. When they told her the truth, she said, ‘I am very glad ; I had concluded my brother was dead.’ —So much for royalties !

Lord March and George Selwyn are arrived, after being windbound for nine days at Calais. George is so charmed with my Lady Hertford, that I believe it was she detained him at Paris, not Lord March. I am full as much transported with Schouvaloff; I never saw so amiable a man! so much good breeding, humility, and modesty, with sense and dignity! an air of melancholy, without anything abject. Monsieur de Caraman is agreeable too, informed and intelligent; he supped at your brother's t'other night, after being at Mrs. Anne Pitt's. As the first curiosity of foreigners is to see Mr. Pitt, and as that curiosity is one of the most difficult points in the world to satisfy, he asked me if Mr. Pitt was like his sister? I told him, 'Qu'ils se ressembloient comme deux gouttes de feu.'

LETTER 1018.—<sup>1</sup> Princess Amelia’s country house.

The Parliament is adjourned till after the holidays, and the trial<sup>2</sup>. There have been two very long days in our own House, on a complaint from Newfoundland merchants on French encroachments. The ministry made a woful piece of work of it the first day, and we the second. Your brother, Sir George Savile, and Barré shone; but on the second night, they popped a sudden division upon us about nothing; some went out, and some stayed in; they were 161, we but 44, and then they flung pillows upon the question, and stifled it,—and so the French have not encroached.

There has been more serious work in the Lords, upon much less important matter; a bill for regulating the poor (don't ask me how, for you know I am a perfect goose about details of business),—formed by one Gilbert<sup>3</sup>, a member, and steward to the Duke of Bridgewater, or Lord Gower, or both,—had passed pacifically through the Commons, but Lord Egmont set fire to it in the Lords. On the second reading he opposed it again, and made a most admired

<sup>2</sup> Of Lord Byron.

<sup>3</sup> Thomas Gilbert (1720–1798), agent to Earl Gower, and M.P. for Newcastle-under-Lyme. His bill was 'for grouping parishes for poor-law purposes in large districts, such as hundreds.' (D. N. B.)

speech; however it passed on. But again, last Tuesday, when it was to be in the committee, such forces were mustered against the bill, that behold all the world regarded it as a pitched battle between Lord Bute and Lord Holland on one side, and the Bedfords and Grenville on the other. You may guess if it grew a day of expectation. When it arrived, Lord Bute was not present, Lord Northumberland voted for the bill, and Lord Holland went away. Still politicians do not give up the mystery. Lord Denbigh and Lord Pomfret, especially the latter, were the most personal against his Grace of Bedford. He and his friends, they say (for I was not there, as you will find presently), kept their temper well. At ten at night the House divided, and, to be sure, the minority was dignified; it consisted of the Dukes of York and Gloucester, the Chancellor, Chief Justice, Lord President, Privy Seal, Lord Chamberlain, Chamberlain to the Queen, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and a Secretary of State. Lord Halifax, the other Secretary, was ill. The numbers were 44 to 58. Lord Pomfret then moved to put off the bill for four months; but the cabinet rallied, and rejected the motion by a majority of one. So it is to come on again after the holidays. The Duke of Newcastle, Lord Temple, and the opposition, had once more the pleasure, which, I believe, they don't dislike, of being in a majority.

Now, for my disaster; you will laugh at it, though it was woful to me. I was to dine at Northumberland House, and went a little after hour: there I found the Countess, Lady Betty Mackenzie, Lady Strafford; my Lady Finlater<sup>4</sup>, who was never out of Scotland before; a tall lad of fifteen, her son<sup>5</sup>; Lord Drogheda, and Mr. Worseley. At five, arrived Mr. Mitchell<sup>6</sup>, who said the Lords had begun to read the Poor Bill, which would take at least two hours, and perhaps would debate it afterwards. We concluded dinner would be called for, it not being very precedented for ladies to wait for gentlemen:—no such thing. Six o'clock came,—seven o'clock came,—our coaches came,—well! we sent them away, and excuses were we were engaged. Still the Countess's heart did not relent, nor uttered a syllable of apology. We wore out the wind and the weather, the opera and the play, Mrs. Cornelys's and Almack's, and every topic that would do in a formal circle. We hinted, represented—in vain. The clock struck eight: my Lady, at last, said she would go and order dinner; but it was a good half-hour before it appeared. We then sat down to a table for fourteen covers: but instead of substantials, there was nothing but a profusion of plates striped red, green, and yellow, gilt plate, blacks and uniforms! My Lady Finlater, who had never seen these embroidered dinners, nor dined after three, was famished. The first course stayed as long as possible, in hopes of the Lords: so did the second. The dessert at last arrived, and the middle dish was actually set on when Lord Finlater and Mr. Mackay<sup>7</sup> arrived!—would you believe it?—the dessert was remanded, and the whole first course brought back again!—Stay, I have not done:—just as this second first course had done its duty, Lord Northumberland, Lord Strafford, and Mackenzie came in, and the whole began a third time! Then the second course and the dessert! I thought we should have dropped from our chairs with fatigue and fumes! When the clock struck eleven, we were asked to return to the drawing-room, and drink tea and coffee, but I said I was engaged to supper, and came home to bed. My dear Lord, think of four hours and a half in a circle of mixed company, and three great dinners, one after another, without interruption ;—no, it exceeded our day at Lord Archer's! Mrs. Armiger<sup>8</sup>, and Mrs. Southwell<sup>9</sup>, Lady Gower's niece, are dead, and old Dr. Young, the poet. Good night!

<sup>4</sup> Lady Mary Murray (d. 1795), daughter of first Duke of Atholl; m. (1749) James Ogilvy, sixth Earl of Findlater and Seafield.

<sup>5</sup> James Ogilvy (1750-1811), Lord Deskford; succeeded his father as seventh Earl of Findlater and Seafield in 1770.

<sup>6</sup> Andrew Mitchell, M.P. for Elgin Burghs, and English minister at Berlin.

<sup>7</sup> Probably John Ross Mackye, M.P. for Kirkcudbright, and Treasurer of the Ordnance.

1019. TO THE REV. WILLIAM MASON.

SIR,

Arlington Street, April 17, 1765.

The unexpected and obliging favour of your letter I own gave me great satisfaction ; I published the Castle of Otranto with the utmost diffidence and doubt of its success. Yet though it has been received much more favourably than I could flatter myself it would be, I must say your approbation is of another sort than general opinion. The first run for or against a new work is what, I am sorry to say, ought not much to flatter or discourage an author. Accordingly, self-love hitherto had not blinded me : I will not answer now but it may get a little hold on me. Your praise is so likely to make me vain, that I oblige myself to recollect all the circumstances that can abate it, such as, the fear I had of producing it at all (for it is not everybody that may in this country play the fool with impunity) ;—the hurry in which it was composed, and its being begun without any plan at all ; for though in the short course of its progress, I did conceive some views, it was so far from being sketched out with any design at all, that it was actually commenced one evening, from the very imperfect recollection of a dream with which I had waked

<sup>8</sup> Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Henry Bunbury, third Baronet, and wife of General Armiger.

<sup>9</sup> Hon. Catherine Watson, daughter of Viscount Sondes, eldest son of first Earl of Rockingham (whom he predeceased) by Lady Catherine Tufton, daughter of sixth Earl of Thanet, and sister of the Dowager Countess Gower ; m. Edward Southwell.

in the morning. It was begun and finished in less than two months, and then I showed it to Mr. Gray, who encouraged me to print it. This is the true history of it; and I cannot but be happy, Sir, that he and you have been pleased with it, yet it is as true, if you will give me leave to say so, that I think your friend judged rightly in pronouncing part of the dialogue too modern. I had the same idea of it, and I could, but such a trifle does not deserve it, point out other defects, besides some to which most probably I am not insensible. You must forgive me, if your commendation has already drawn me in to talk too much of a thing of my own; but I am vain of its pleasing you, Sir, and what would have fully comforted me if I had miscarried with most readers, is not likely to make me think worse of their judgement when confirmed by your taste.

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient and obliged humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

P.S. It is not my interest to recommend it, but in justice to what I owe to your amusement, I must advise you to read the Lettres du Marquis de Roselle, if you have not yet seen them. They are written by the wife of Monsieur Beaumont, who has got so much credit by defending the family of Calas<sup>1</sup>. I do not recommend the boasted Siege of Calais to you, though it contains some good lines, but the conduct is woful.

1020. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, April 18, 1765.

LADY HOLLAND carries this, which enables me to write a little more explicitly than I have been able to do lately.

LETTER 1019.—1 Jean Calas, a Calvinist, executed on a false charge of murder. His children were seized and placed in Roman Catholic institutions.

The King has been in the utmost danger ; the humour in his face having fallen upon his breast. He now appears constantly ; yet, I fear, his life is very precarious, and that there is even apprehension of a consumption. After many difficulties from different quarters, a Regency Bill is determined ; the King named it first to the ministers, who said they intended to mention it to him as soon as he was well : yet they are not thought to be fond of it. The King is to come to the House on Tuesday, and recommend the provision to the Parliament. Yet, if what is whispered proves true, that the nomination of the Regent is to be reserved to the King's will, it is likely to cause great uneasiness. If the ministers propose such a clause, it is strong evidence of their own instability, and, I should think, would not save them, at least, some of them. The world expects changes soon, though not a thorough alteration ; yet, if any takes place shortly, I should think it would be a material one than not. The enmity between Lord Bute and Mr. Grenville is not denied on either side. There is a notion, and I am inclined to think not ill founded, that the former and Mr. Pitt are treating. It is certain that the last has expressed wishes that the opposition may lie still for the remainder of the session. This, at least, puts an end to the question on your brother, of which I am glad, for the present. The common town talk is, that Lord Northumberland does not care to return to Ireland,—that you are to succeed him there, Lord Rochford you, and that Sandwich is to go to Spain. My belief is, that there will be no change, except, perhaps, a single one for Lord Northumberland, unless there are capital removals indeed.

The Chancellor, Grenville, the Bedfords, and the two Secretaries, are one body ; at least, they pass for such : yet it is very lately, if one of them has dropped his prudent management with Lord Bute. There seems an unwilling-ness to discard the Bedfords, though their Graces themselves keep little terms of civility to Lord Bute, none to the Princess (Dowager). Lord Gower is a better courtier, and Rigby would do anything to save his place.

This is the present state, which every day may alter: even to-morrow is a day of expectation, as the last struggle of the Poor Bill. If the Bedfords carry it, either by force or sufferance (though Lord Bute has constantly denied being the author of the opposition to it), I shall less expect any great change soon. In those less important, I shall not wonder to find the Duke of Richmond come upon the scene, perhaps for Ireland, though he is not talked of.

Your brother is out of town, not troubling himself, though the time seems so critical. I am not so philosophic; as I almost wish for anything that may put an end to my being concerned in the mêlée—for any end to a most gloomy prospect for the country, alas! I see it not.

Lord Byron's trial lasted two days, and he was acquitted totally by four Lords, Beaulieu, Falmouth, Despensers, and Orford, and found guilty of manslaughter by one hundred and twenty. The Dukes of York and Gloucester were present in their places. The prisoner behaved with great decorum, and seemed thoroughly shocked and mortified. Indeed, the bitterness of the world against him has been great, and the stories they have revived or invented to load him, very grievous. The Chancellor behaved with his usual, or, rather greater vulgarness and blunders. Lord Pomfret kept away decently, from the similitude of his own story<sup>1</sup>.

I have been to wait on Messrs. Choiseul<sup>2</sup> and De Lauragais<sup>3</sup>, as you desired, but have not seen them yet. The former is lodged with my Lord Pembroke, and the LETTER 1020. — <sup>1</sup> Lord Pomfret killed Captain Grey in a duel in 1752.

<sup>2</sup> Probably Renault César Louis (1735–1791), Comte de Choiseul, son of the Duc de Praslin, whom he succeeded in 1785.

<sup>3</sup> Louis Léon Félicité (1733–1824), Comte de Lauraguais, Duc de Brancas.

Wether & Lockhart, N.Y.

*George Walpole, 3rd Earl of Orford
from a painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds, P.R.A.*

Guerchys are in terrible apprehensions of his exhibiting some scene.

The Duke of Cumberland bore the journey to Newmarket extremely well, but has been lethargic since ; yet they have found out that Daffy's Elixir agrees with, and does him good. Prince Frederick is very bad. There is no private news at all. As I shall not deliver this till the day after to-morrow, I shall be able to give you an account of the fate of the Poor Bill.

The medals that came for me from Geneva, I forgot to mention to you, and to beg you to be troubled with them till I see you. I had desired Lord Stanhope to send them ; and will beg you too, if any bill is sent, to pay it for me, and I will repay it you. I say nothing of my journey, which the unsettled state of affairs makes it impossible for me to fix. I long for every reason upon earth to be with you.

April 20th, Saturday.

The Poor Bill is put off till Monday ; is then to be amended, and then dropped : a confession of weakness, in a set of people not famous for being moderate ! I was assured, last night, that Ireland had been twice offered to you, and that it hung on their insisting upon giving you a secretary, either Wood or Bunbury. I replied very truly that I knew nothing of it, that you had never mentioned it to me, and I believed not even to your brother. The answer was, 'Oh ! his particular friends are always the last that know anything about him.' Princess Amalie loves this topic, and is for ever teasing us about your mystery. I defend myself by pleading that I have desired you never to tell me anything till it was in the Gazette.

They say there is to be a new alliance in the house of Montagu ; that Lord Hinchinbrook<sup>4</sup> is to marry the sole fourth Earl of Sandwich, whom he succeeded in 1792 ; m. (1766), as his remaining daughter of Lord Halifax ; that her fortune is to be divided into three shares, of which each father is to take one, and the third is to be the provision for the victims. I don't think this the most unlikely part of the story. Adieu ! my dear Lord.

<sup>4</sup> John Montagu (1743-1814), Viscount Hinchinbrooke, eldest son of

1021. TO SIR DAVID DALRYMPLE.

SIR,

Strawberry Hill, April 21, 1765.

Except the mass of Conway papers, on which I have not yet had time to enter seriously, I am sorry I have nothing at present that would answer your purpose. Lately, indeed, I have had little leisure to attend to literary pursuits. I have been much out of order with a violent cold and cough for great part of the winter, and the distractions of this country, which reach even those who mean the least to profit by their country, have not left even me, who hate politics, without some share in them. Yet as what one does not love, cannot engross one entirely, I have amused myself a little with writing. Our friend Lord Finlater will perhaps show you the fruit of that trifling, though I had not the confidence to trouble you with such a strange thing as a miraculous story, of which I fear the greatest merit is the novelty.

I have lately perused with much pleasure a collection of old ballads, to which I see, Sir, you have contributed with your usual benevolence. Continue this kindness to the public, and smile as I do, when the pains you take for them are misunderstood or perverted. I would not omit my notes in your case. Will they, who wanted common sense when they read your first edition, enjoy an ampler portion first wife, Lady Elizabeth Montagu (d. 1768), only surviving daughter of second Earl of Halifax.

collated with original in possession of Messrs. H. Sotheran & Co., 140 Strand, W.C.

LETTER 1021.—Incomplete in C.;

of it on the publication of the second? Authors must content themselves with hoping that two or three intelligent persons in an age will understand the merit of their writings; and though those authors are bound in good breeding to suppose that the public in general is enlightened, they who are in the secret know how few of that public they have any reason to wish should read their works. I beg pardon of my masters the public, and am confident, Sir, you will not betray me: but let me beg you not to defraud the few that deserve your information, in compliment to those who are not capable of receiving it. Do as I do about my small house here. Everybody that comes to see it or me, are so good as to wonder that I don't make this or that alteration. I never haggle with them, but always say I intend it. They are satisfied with the attention and themselves, and I remain with the enjoyment of my house as I like it. Adieu! dear Sir.

I am your much obliged and obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

P.S. As I think of making Lord Hertford a visit at Paris this summer, I should be happy if you would honour me with any commission thither. Perhaps there I could easily find any prints of Nanteuil that you may still want.

1022. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, May 5, 1765.

THE plot thickens; at least, it does not clear up. I don't know how to tell you in the compass of a letter, what is matter for a history, and it is the more difficult, as we are but just in the middle.

During the recess, the King acquainted the ministry that he would have a Bill of Regency, and told them the particulars of his intention. The town gives Lord Holland the honour of the measure; certain it is, the ministry, who are not the court, did not taste some of the items: such as the Regent to be in petto, the Princes<sup>1</sup> to be omitted, and four secret nominations to which the Princes might be applied. However, thinking it was better to lose their share of future power than their present places, the ministers gave a gulp and swallowed the whole potion; still it lay so heavy at their stomachs, that they brought up part of it again, and obtained the Queen's name to be placed as one that might be Regent. Mankind laughed, and proclaimed their Wisdoms bit. Upon this, their Wisdoms beat up for opponents, and set fire to the old stubble of the Princess and Lord Bute. Everybody took the alarm; and such uneasiness was raised, that after the King had notified the bill to both Houses, a new message was sent, and instead of four secret nominations, the five Princes were named, with power to the crown of supplying their places if they died off.

Last Tuesday the bill was read a second time in the Lords. Lord Lyttelton opposed an unknown Regent, Lord Temple the whole bill, seconded by Lord Shelburne. The first division came on the commitment of the whole bill. The Duke of Newcastle and almost all the opposition were with the majority, for his Grace could not decently oppose so great a likeness of his own child, the former bill<sup>2</sup>, and so they were one hundred and twenty. Lord Temple, Lord Shelburne, the Duke of Grafton, and six more, composed the minority; the slenderness of which so enraged Lord Temple, though he had declared himself of no party, and the death of Frederick, Prince of Wales, in 1751.

LETTER 1022.—<sup>1</sup> The King's uncle and brothers.

<sup>2</sup> The bill which was passed on

connected with no party, that he and the Duke of Bolton came no more to the House. Next day Lord Lyttelton moved an address to the King, to name the person he would recommend for Regent. In the midst of this debate, the Duke of Richmond started two questions; whether the Queen was naturalized, and if not, whether capable of being Regent? and he added a third much more puzzling; who are the royal family? Lord Denbigh answered flippantly, all who are prayed for: the Duke of Bedford, more significantly, those only who are in the order of succession—a direct exclusion of the Princess; for the Queen is named in the bill. The Duke of Richmond moved to consult the judges; Lord Mansfield fought this off, declared he had his opinion, but would not tell it—and stayed away next day! They then proceeded on Lord Lyttelton's motion, which was rejected by eighty-nine to thirty-one; after which, the Duke of Newcastle came no more; and Grafton, Rockingham, and many others, went to Newmarket; for that rage is so strong, that I cease to wonder at the gentleman who was going out to hunt as the battle of Edgehill began.

The third day was a scene of folly and confusion, for when Lord Mansfield is absent, Lost is the nation's sense, nor can be found.

The Duke of Richmond moved an amendment, that the persons capable of the Regency should be the Queen, the Princess Dowager, and all the descendants of the late King usually resident in England. Lord Halifax endeavoured to jockey this, by a previous amendment of now for usually. The Duke persisted with great firmness and cleverness; Lord Halifax, with as much peevishness and absurdity; in truth, he made a woful figure. The Duke of Bedford supported t'other Duke against the Secretary, but would not yield to name the Princess, though the Chancellor declared her of the royal family. This droll personage is exactly what Woodward<sup>3</sup> would be, if there was such a farce as Trappolin<sup>4</sup> Chancellor. You will want a key to all this, but who has a key to chaos? After puzzling on for two hours how to adjust these motions, while the spectators stood laughing around, Lord Folkestone<sup>5</sup> rose, and said, 'Why not say now and usually?' They adopted this amendment at once, and then rejected the Duke of Richmond's motion, but ordered the judges to attend next day on the question of naturalization.

Now comes the marvellous transaction, and I defy Mr. Hume, all historian as he is, to parallel it. The judges had decided for the Queen's capability, when Lord Halifax rose, by the King's permission, desired to have the bill recommitted, and then moved the Duke of Richmond's own words, with the single omission of the Princess Dowager's name, and thus she alone is rendered incapable of the Regency—and stigmatized by Act of Parliament! The astonishment of the world is not to be described<sup>6</sup>. Lord Bute's friends are thunderstruck. The Duke of Bedford almost danced about the House for joy. Comments there are, various; and some palliate it, by saying it was done at the Princess's desire; but the most inquisitive say, the King was taken by surprise, that Lord Halifax proposed the amendment to him, and hurried with it to the House of Lords, before it could be recalled; and they even surmise that he did not observe to the King the omission of his mother's name. Be that as it may, open war seems to be declared between the court and the

<sup>3</sup> Henry Woodward (1717-1777), comedian. He was excellent as Harlequin.

<sup>4</sup> Hero of an Italian tragi-comedy called Trappolin creduto Principe, adapted for the English stage as Duke and no Duke.

<sup>5</sup> William Bouverie (1725-1776), second Viscount Folkestone; cr. Earl of Radnor, 1765.

<sup>6</sup> For the explanation of this transaction, see letter to Mann of May 14, 1765.

administration, and men are gazing to see which side will be victorious.

To-morrow the bill comes to us, and Mr. Pitt, too, violent against the whole bill, unless this wonderful event has altered his tone. For my part I shall not be surprised, if he affects to be in astonishment at missing 'a great and most respectable name'! This is the sum total—but what a sum total! It is the worst of North Britons published by Act of Parliament!

I took the liberty, in my last, of telling you what I heard about your going to Ireland. It was from one you know very well, and one I thought well informed, or I should not have mentioned it. Positive as the information was, I find nothing to confirm it. On the contrary, Lord Harcourt seems the most probable, if anything is probable at this strange juncture. You will scarce believe me when I tell you, what I know is true, that the Bedfords pressed strongly for Lord Weymouth—yes, for Lord Weymouth. Is anything extraordinary in them?

Will it be presuming too much upon your friendship and indulgence, if I hint another point to you, which, I own, seems to me right to mention to you? You know how eagerly the ministry have laboured to deprive Mr. Thomas Walpole of the French commerce of tobacco. His correspondent sends him word, that you was so persuaded it was taken away, that you had recommended another person. You know enough, my dear Lord, of the little connection I have with that part of my family, though we do visit again; and therefore will, I hope, be convinced, that it is for your sake that I principally mention it. If Mr. Walpole loses this vast branch of trade, he and Sir Joshua Vanneck<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Pitt's remark when, on coming into power in 1757, he noticed the absence of Lord Anson's name from the proposed Board of Admiralty.

<sup>8</sup> Sir Joshua Vanneck, first Baronet, d. 1777.

must shut up shop. Judge the noise that would make in the City! Mr. Walpole's alliance with the Cavendishes (for I will say nothing of our family) would interest them deeply in his cause, and I think you would be sorry to have them think you instrumental to his ruin. Your brother knows of my writing to you and giving you this information, and we are both solicitous that your name should not appear in this transaction. This letter goes to you by a private hand, or I would not have spoken so plainly throughout. Whenever you please to recall your positive order, that I should always tell you whatever I hear that relates to you, I shall willingly forbear, for I am sensible this is not the most agreeable province of friendship; yet, as it is certainly due when demanded, I don't consider myself, but sacrifice the more agreeable task of pleasing you, to that of serving you, that I may show myself

Yours most sincerely,
H. W.

1023. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, May 11, 1765.

MR. STANLEY, one of the Lords of the Admiralty, has done me the honour of desiring a letter of recommendation to you, as he is going to pass the summer in Italy. His character and abilities must be too well known to you to make my interest in your friendship necessary, even if he should wish for greater share in your acquaintance than your constant attention and good nature direct you to offer to your countrymen in general: yet it is so flattering to me to seem to contribute to your connection, that when I beg you to exceed your common civilities on his account, I am determined to please myself with thinking that you do it on mine.

1024. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Sunday, May 12, 1765.

THE clouds and mists that I raised by my last letter will not be dispersed by this; nor will the Bill of Regency, as long as it has a day's breath left (and it has but one to come), cease, I suppose, to produce extraordinary events. For agreeable events, it has not produced one to any set or side, except in gratifying malice; every other passion has received, or probably will receive, a box on the ear.

In my last I left the Princess Dowager in the mire. The next incident was of a negative kind. Mr. Pitt, who, if he had been wise, would have come to help her out, chose to wait to see if she was to be left there, and gave himself a terrible fit of the gout. As nobody was ready to read his part to the audience (though, I assure you, we do not want a genius or two who think themselves born to dictate), the first day in our House did not last two minutes. The next, which was Tuesday, we rallied our understandings (mine, indeed, did not go beyond being quiet, when the administration had done for us what we could not do for ourselves), and combated the bill till nine at night. Barré, who will very soon be our first orator, especially as some are a little afraid to dispute with him, attacked it admirably, and your brother ridiculed the House of Lords delightfully, who, he said, had deliberated without concluding, and concluded without deliberating. However, we broke up without a division.

Can you devise what happened next? A buzz spread itself, that the Tories would move to reinstate the Princess. You will perhaps be so absurd as to think with me, that when the administration had excluded her, it was our business to pay her a compliment. Alas! that was my opinion, but I was soon given to understand that Patriots must be men of virtue, must be Pharisees, and not countenance naughty women: and that when the Duchess of Bedford had thrown the first stone, we had nothing to do but continue pelting. Unluckily I was not convinced; I could neither see the morality nor prudence of branding the King's mother upon no other authority than public fame: yet, willing to get something when I could not get all, I endeavoured to obtain that we should stay away. Even this was warmly contested with me, and, though I persuaded several, particularly the two oldest Cavendishes<sup>1</sup>, the Townshends<sup>2</sup>, and your nephew Fitzroy, whom I trust you will thank me for saving, I could not convince Lord John, who, I am sorry to say, is the most obstinate, conceited young man I ever saw; George Onslow, and that old simpleton the Duke of Newcastle, who had the impudence to talk to me of character, and that we should be ruined with the public, if we did not divide against the Princess. You will be impatient, and wonder I do not name your brother. You know how much he respects virtue and honour, even in their names; Lord John, who, I really believe, respects them too, has got cunning enough to see their empire over your brother, and had fascinated him to agree to this outrageous, provoking, and most unjustifiable of all acts. Still Mr. Conway was so good as to yield to my earnest and vehement entreaties, and it was at last agreed to propose the name of the Queen; and when we did not carry it, as we did not expect to do, to retire before the question came on the Princess. But even this measure was not strictly observed. We divided 67 for the nomination of the Queen, against 157. Then Morton<sup>3</sup> moved to reinstate the Princess. Martin, her treasurer, made a most indiscreet and offensive speech in her behalf; said she had been stigmatized by the House of Lords, and had lived long enough in this country to know the hearts and falsehood of those who had professed the most to her. Grenville vows publicly he will never forgive this, and was not more discreet, declaring, though he agreed to the restoration of her name, that he thought the omission would have been universally acceptable. George Onslow and all the Cavendishes, gained over by Lord John, and the most attached of the Newcastle band, opposed the motion; but your brother, Sir William Meredith, and I, and others, came away, which reduced the numbers so much, that there was no division. But now to unfold all this black scene; it comes out as I had guessed, and very plainly told them, that the Bedfords had stirred up our fools to do what they did not dare to do themselves. Old Newcastle had even told me, that unless we opposed the Princess, the Duke of Bedford would not. It was sedulously given out, that Forrester, the latter Duke's lawyer, would speak against her; and after the question had passed, he told our people, that we had given up the game when it was in our hands, for there had been many more noes than ayes. It was very true, many did not wish well enough to the Princess to roar for her; and many will say no when the question is put, who will vote ay if it comes to a division, and of this I do not doubt but the Bedfords had taken care—well! duped by these gross arts, the Cavendishes and Pelhams determined to divide the next day on the report. I did not learn this mad resolution till four o'clock, when it was too late, and your brother in the House, and the report actually made; so I turned back and came away, learning afterwards, to my great mortification, that he had voted with them. If anything could comfort me, it would be, that even so early as last night, and only this happened on Friday night, it was generally allowed how much I had been in the right, and foretold exactly all that had happened. They had vaunted to me how strong they should be. I had replied, 'When you were but 76 on the most inoffensive question, do you think you will be half that number on the most personal and indecent that can be devised?' Accordingly, they were but 37 to 167; and to show how much the Bedfords were at the bottom of all, Rigby, Forrester, and Lord Charles Spencer went up into the Speaker's chamber, and would not vote for the Princess! At first I was not quite so well treated. Sir William Meredith, who, by the way, voted in the second question against his opinion, told me Onslow had said that he, Sir William, your brother, and Lord Townshend, had stayed away from conscience, but all the others from interest. I replied, 'Then I am included in the latter predicament: but you may tell Mr. Onslow that he will take a place before I shall, and that I had rather be suspected of being mercenary, than stand up in my place and call God to witness that I meant nothing personal, when I was doing the most personal thing in the world.'—I beg your pardon, my dear Lord, for talking so much about myself, but the detail was necessary and important to you; who I wish should see that I can act with a little common sense, and will not be governed by all the frenzy of party.

LETTER 1024.—<sup>1</sup> Lord George and Lord Frederick Cavendish.

<sup>2</sup> Probably Thomas Townshend, sen., M.P. for Cambridge University, and his son and nephew—Thomas Townshend, M.P. for Whitechurch (afterwards Viscount Sydney), and Charles Townshend, M.P. for Great Yarmouth (afterwards Lord Bayning), known as 'Spanish Charles' to distinguish him from his cousin. He had been secretary to Sir Benjamin Keene when the latter was Ambassador at Madrid.

<sup>3</sup> John Morton (d. 1780), M.P. for Abington, Chief Justice of Chester, and Deputy High Steward of the University of Oxford.

The rest of the bill was contested inch by inch, and by division on division, till eleven at night, after our wise leaders had whittled down the minority to twenty-four. Charles Townshend, they say, surpassed all he had ever done, in a wrangle with Onslow, and was so lucky as to have Barré absent, who has long lain in wait for him. When they told me how well Charles had spoken on himself, I replied, 'That is conformable to what I always thought of his parts, that he speaks best on what he understands the least.'

We have done with the bill, and to-morrow our correction goes to the Lords. It will be a day of wonderful expectation, to see in what manner they will swallow their vomit. The Duke of Bedford, it is conjectured, will stay away:—but what will that scape-goose, Lord Halifax, do, who is already convicted of having told the King a most notorious lie, that if the Princess was not given up by the Lords, she would be unanimously excluded by the Commons? The Duke of Bedford, who had broke the ground, is little less blamable; but Sandwich, who was present, has, with his usual address, contrived not to be talked of, since the first hour.

When the bill shall be passed, the eyes of mankind will turn to see what will be the consequence. The Princess, and Lord Bute, and the Scotch, do not affect to conceal their indignation. If Lord Halifax is even reprieved, the King is more enslaved to a cabal than ever his grandfather was: yet how replace them? Newcastle and the most desirable of the opposition have rendered themselves more obnoxious than ever, and even seem, or must seem to Lord Bute, in league with those he wishes to remove. The want of a proper person for Chancellor of the Exchequer is another difficulty, though I think easily removable by clapping a tied wig on Ellis, Barrington, or any other block, and calling it George Grenville. One remedy is obvious, and at which, after such insults and provocations, were I Lord Bute, I should not stick; I would deliver myself up, bound hand and foot, to Mr. Pitt, rather than not punish such traitors and wretches, who murmur, submit, affront, and swallow in the most ignominious manner,—‘Oh! il faudra qu’il y vienne,’—as Léonor says in the Marquis de Roselle,—‘il y viendra.’ For myself, I have another little comfort, which is seeing that when the ministry encourage the opposition, they do but lessen our numbers.

You may be easy about this letter, for Monsieur de Guerchy sends it for me by a private hand, as I did the last. I wish, by some such conveyance, you would tell me a little of your mind on all this embroil, and whether you approve or disapprove my conduct. After the liberties you have permitted me to take with you, my dear Lord, and without them, as you know my openness, and how much I am accustomed to hear of my faults, I think you cannot hesitate. Indeed, I trust, I have done, or tried to do, just what you would have wished. Could I, who have at least some experience and knowledge of the world, have directed, our party had not been in the contemptible and ridiculous situation it is. Had I had more weight, things still more agreeable to you had happened. Now, I could almost despair; but I have still perseverance, and some resources left. Whenever I can get to you, I will unfold a great deal; but in this critical situation, I cannot trust what I can leave to no management but my own.

Your brother would have writ, if I had not: he is gone to Park Place to-day, with his usual phlegm, but returns to-morrow. What would I give you were here yourself; perhaps you do not thank me for the wish.

Do not wonder if, except thanking you for D’Alembert’s book<sup>4</sup>, I say not a word of anything but politics. I have not had a single other thought these three weeks. Though in all the bloom of my passion, lilac-tide, I have not been

<sup>4</sup> A pamphlet Sur la Destruction désintéressé (D’Alembert), published
des Jésuites en France, par un auteur at Geneva in 1765.

at Strawberry this fortnight. I saw things arrived at the point I wished, and to which I had singularly contributed to bring them, as you shall know hereafter, and then I saw all my work kicked down by two or three frantic boys, and I see what I most dread likely to happen, unless I can prevent it,—but I have said enough for you to understand me. I think we agree. However, this is for no ear or breast but your own. Remember Monsieur de Nivernois<sup>5</sup>, and take care of the letters you receive. Adieu!

1025. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, May 14, 1765.

You must be surprised at my silence: it has been of longer duration than I ever practised with regard to you, my dear Sir, except in the most inactive months of summer. It commenced indeed from want of matter—it has continued from incessant occupation. For some time I had nothing to tell you, but the trial of Lord Byron, a solemn scene for a worthless man, but whose former faults had given handle to ill-nature to represent him as guilty of an event, which truly it had been very difficult for him to avoid. He escaped with life; and recovered some portion of honour, if that can comfort him, after the publicity made of his character, and the misfortune of killing an amiable man, but one not blameless in the late instance.

This whole history has, however, been totally swallowed up and forgotten for some weeks in a memorable discussion, in which, though the generality of the world has been much more indifferent to it than I could possibly have expected, the political agents and spectators have been deeply interested; and which, if it should not suddenly produce the consequences that ought naturally to attend it, may give birth to very serious events sooner or later. It has occupied me so much, that for above a month I have totally neglected every other avocation. The detail I could not give under many voluminous pages: I will endeavour to sketch out enough of the great lines to give you some insight into the present strange situation of affairs; and as I mean to send this by a private hand to Paris, though it may retard its journey, I shall speak to you more openly than I have chosen to do for these two or three years, more from attention to your interest than to my own, which I have plainly not considered, and of which you know I have never been very careful.

<sup>5</sup> The private letters of Nivernais were published by D'Éon.

My Lady Denbigh<sup>1</sup> told me, at the very beginning of this winter, that when Monsieur Chavigny<sup>2</sup> was minister here from France several years ago, he said to her, 'I have observed, that when the warmest sessions have been expected in Parliament, they have proved the most inactive; and then when all was thought to be over, somebody has cried out, "Voilà un lièvre!" Another has replied, "Il n'y a point de lièvre"; and at last everybody has run to see if there was a hare or not.' This I have known to be a very just remark, twice at least in my memory; formerly, on the Marriage Act, and the Bill of Regency in 1751; and now it tallies to the occasion, as if drawn from it.

The King's late illness, and the precariousness of his health, naturally pointed to a provision for a Regency; but many secret causes seemed to impede the necessary steps. The propriety of the Queen being Regent was combated by the jealousy such a declaration might give the Princess; and the known and almost avowed hatred between Lord Bute and the present ministry, made both sides averse to the measure. They hoped to secure their power if the King should die without such a provision ; and he could not wish to declare a Council of Regency, which would either confirm his enemies in their station or oblige him to remove them immediately, to which the irresolution of his nature, and the difficulty of supplying their places, did not incline him ; for the Scotch he did not dare to bring more forward. The Tories are too contemptible to be raised, and the opposition seem more hostile to him than to the ministers. The measure was, however, so pressed upon him that he yielded, and the King himself notified his intention to the Cabinet Council, of which the five chieftains were in strict union, that is, the Chancellor<sup>3</sup>, the Duke of Bedford, Grenville, and the two Secretaries<sup>4</sup>. Judge of their surprise, in this situation of things, when they learned that the Regent was to be reserved, in petto, to the King's secret nomination ; that any one of the royal family might be the person ; and that the King's four brothers and uncle were to be left out of the Council, but with a civil intimation that four of the five might be admitted by the four nominations which the King had reserved to himself, as his grandfather had done. Nothing could have been devised less palatable to the Princes, to the ministers, or to the people. From the first band, however, there were heard few murmurs except from the Duke of Cumberland, who determined in person to oppose the bill. The people, who have little affection for any one person concerned, waited both for the event and its consequences with much indifference ; and though egged on a little by some of the opposition, and more by the administration, have taken little or no part in the affair. But the ministers have not been so neutral. Their first step was, to be disgusted ; their next, to swallow their disgusts, and keep their places. Then they grumbled, and prevailed to have the Queen's name inserted, though merely as one that might be Regent. Then came the bill itself in the House of Lords. Then Lord Lyttelton moved to address the King to name the person he would recommend for Regent; but the motion was rejected by a great majority, after Lord Temple and eight more lords had divided against the whole bill (after which Lord Temple attended it no more). I should have told you, that after the bill had been read the first time, the King gave up the four secret nominations, and recommended the five Princes, reserving only a power of filling up their places, if any of them should die, by a secret Act. On this the Duke of Cumberland went to Newmarket.

LETTER 1025.—<sup>1</sup> Isabella de Jonghe, a Dutchwoman. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> Chevalier Théodore de Chavigny

(d. 1771), French minister in London in 1732.

<sup>3</sup> Lord Northampton. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> The Earls of Sandwich and Halifax. Walpole.

On the second reading, a doubt was started whether the Princess Dowager is of the royal family. The Chancellor, who had been of the contrary opinion in Council, declared she was; Lord Mansfield, who had in Council agreed with the Chancellor, would not tell his opinion in the House, and absented himself. In this uncertainty, the Duke of Richmond proposed to insert the name of the Princess in the bill; but the motion was rejected. The very next day, to the astonishment of mankind, Lord Halifax<sup>5</sup>, by the King's order, as was understood, moved the specific words of the Duke of Richmond (which, I should have mentioned, restrained the persons capable of being Regent to the Princess and the descendants of the late King, resident in England), singly

<sup>5</sup> Lord Halifax, and some said Lord Sandwich too, went suddenly to the Queen's house, and taking the King by surprise, told him that the House of Commons would certainly exclude the Princess Dowager from the bill, which would be such a disgrace, that his Majesty had better propose himself to omit her name. He consented; and Lord

Halifax drove as fast as possible to the House of Lords, where very few were yet assembled, and made the motion, whispering, that it was by his Majesty's command, and then immediately moved to adjourn the House, before any of the Princess's and Lord Bute's friends were arrived. Walpole.

omitting the Princess of Wales—and it passed. The consternation of the Princess's and Lord Bute's friends soon informed the world how little they approved, or had been acquainted with, a stroke that stigmatized the King's mother by Act of Parliament! The truth I believe is, that the Duke of Bedford and the two Secretaries had surprised the King into an acquiescence with this most indecent and outrageous measure, and had not given him time to consider, communicate, or retract it.

From the Lords then came the bill to us. In the meantime Mr. Pitt, who has not once honoured us with his presence this session, and who was announced as a determined opposer of the whole bill, was opportunely seized with a fit of the gout—and probably waits the event of this amazing confusion. Men of common sense concluded, that when so popular a point was gained, the bill would run its course without interruption: but my friends<sup>6</sup>, who are not exquisite in distinguishing between little objects and great, and who did not see, what every mortal else saw, the disunion between the court and the administration, and transported at being delivered from their apprehensions of being checked or traversed by Mr. Pitt, who will not connect with them, went on haggling about, and squabbling for or against every trifle in the bill, and succeeding in none. Those very impediments, like a turnstile that hinders you, but does not stop you, gave time to the court to rally their spirits and assume their indignation; the consequence of which was, that the Tories actually moved to reinstate the name of the Princess. Nor were the ministers idle; but by every gross art and encouragement plied the opposition to reject the motion, giving them room to expect their support. The Duke of Cumberland's resentment, the Duke of Newcastle's folly, and the violence of some of the young men, joined in this senseless and provoking insult: but the greater part, from unwillingness to make themselves desperate, from more temper, or from more experience, or from a sensible desire of widening and profiting of so unexpected a breach, refused to concur in this frenzy; accordingly the motion passed, with slight opposition and no division—yet the next day, on the report, the Duke of Bedford's friends openly, and Grenville more covertly, drew the senseless zealots into a division, which at last proved but 39 to 169: the Duke of Bedford's friends retiring rather than vote for the Princess.

<sup>6</sup> The opposition. Walpole.

Still the great difficulty remained, to make the Lords eat their words,—but it proved no difficulty at all. Sandwich moved to agree to our amendment, and Bedford and Halifax sat silent, the latter making the most abject and contemptible figure one can conceive!

Well! I have contrived to crowd this transaction, so fruitful of events and revolutions, into one sheet of paper. You will be curious to know the consequences; and so am I; yet I much question whether any material will follow. If they do not, the opposition may thank themselves. Lord Bute may affect to be satisfied with having set aside a mark, that will remain indelible; and the mean part the ministers have acted, may make him think he can nowhere find tools who will submit to greater indignities. If he doubts the King's life, he may fear to show his resentment. Yet the affront is so glaring, while at least Lord Halifax remains unpunished, that one can scarce conceive no vengeance being exercised. Still it remains to see if Mr. Pitt will not once more be sent for. His terms may be high, and yet surely it is worth while to grant any! But I will reason no farther,—remember this letter is for no eye but your own.

Mr. Stanley, who has negotiated so much at Paris, where he is in the highest vogue, has desired me to give him a letter to you, as he is going to Italy for the summer. I am very well acquainted with him, but have no friendship; yet I should wish you to be particularly attentive to him, and for your own sake. He has very good parts, much knowledge, and good breeding, but his manner is not agreeable. I only warn you to be upon your guard: don't talk of me more than is necessary, nor of politics more than you can help. In these distractions, I do not know which way he particularly leans, and you had better seem willing to be informed by him, than already instructed.

The papers tell me your nephew and Lady Lucy are married, on which I congratulate you; but I know no more of it. Indeed, as I told you in the outset, all my late ideas have been absorbed in politics—not to get deeper into them, but to spy an opportunity of retreating: it is terrible to have to do with many fools, and not with enough! Adieu!

P.S. I have been so cautious as not to mention a single word of the affair of the young Damers, and am glad I was so prudent, for I have not heard it from a soul; and I should have been very sorry the family should have thought it came from you. The eldest, at least, is returned, for I saw him t'other day. The whole to be sure will come out by degrees from the English abroad. I did not even make your compliments to my Lord and Lady, lest they should suspect you had told me. I suppose it is to conceal it, that they appear unconcerned<sup>7</sup>.

<sup>7</sup> The two elder sons of Lord Milton had been in a fray with other young men at Rome, in which a coachman had accidentally been killed. Walpole.

1026. TO THE EARL OF HERTFORD.

Arlington Street, Monday evening, May 20, 1765.

I SCARCE know where to begin, and I am sure not where I shall end. I had comforted myself with getting over all my difficulties: my friends opened their eyes, and were ready, nay, some of them eager, to list under Mr. Pitt; for I must tell you, that by a fatal precipitation, the King,—when his ministers went to him last Thursday, 16th, to receive his commands for his speech at the end of the session, which was to have been the day after to-morrow, the 22nd,—forbade the Parliament to be prorogued, which he said he would only have adjourned: they were thunder-struck, and asked if he intended to make any change in his administration? he replied, certainly; he could not bear it as it was. His uncle<sup>1</sup> was sent for, was ordered to form a new administration, and treat with Mr. Pitt. This negotiation proceeded for four days, and got wind in two. The town, more accommodating than Mr. Pitt, settled the whole list of employments. The facilities, however, were so few, that yesterday the Hero of Culloden went down in person to the Conqueror of America, at Hayes, and though tendering almost carte blanche,—blanchissime for the constitution, and little short of it for the whole red book of places,—brought back nothing but a flat refusal<sup>2</sup>. Words cannot LETTER 1026.—<sup>1</sup> The Duke of Cumberland.

<sup>2</sup> 'On the 20th, his Royal Highness went to Hayes. With much elevation, Pitt did not seem untractable. He made three principal demands: Regulation of general warrants; restitution of officers; alliances with Protestant Powers. The first article the Duke told him would be accorded; the King himself had named the second; the third would be most subject to difficulty. . . . The Duke at last said that, though not authorized, he would venture to offer him carte blanche. Lord Temple should have the Treasury, Lord Northumberland would take any other post. Mr. Pitt said, Lord Temple would not take the Treasury, but some other place—if any: nor would he promise that himself would take any part in the new system. The Duke of Cumberpaint the confusion into which everything is thrown. The four ministers, I mean the Duke of Bedford, Grenville, and the two Secretaries, acquainted their master yesterday, that they adhere to one another, and shall all resign to-morrow, and, perhaps, must be recalled on Wednesday,—must have a carte noire, not blanche, and will certainly not expect any stipulations to be offered for the constitution, by no means the object of their care!

You are not likely to tell in Gath, nor publish in Ascalon, the alternative of humiliation to which the crown is reduced. But, alas! this is far from being the lightest evil to which we are at the eve of being exposed. I mentioned the mob of weavers<sup>3</sup> which had besieged the Parliament, and attacked the Duke of Bedford, and I thought no more of it; but on Friday, a well disciplined, and, I fear, too well conducted a multitude, repaired again to Westminster with red and black flags; the House of Lords, where not thirty were present, acted with no spirit;—examined Justice Fielding, and the magistrates, and adjourned till to-day. At seven that evening, a prodigious multitude assaulted Bedford House, and began to pull down the walls, and another party surrounded the garden, where there were but fifty men on guard, and had forced their way, if another party of Guards that had been sent for land, before he went to Hayes, had sent for Lord Temple to town; and it was observed that from the time that Lord saw Mr. Pitt, the difficulties and reluctance of the latter were visibly augmented.' (Memoirs of George III, ed. 1894, vol. ii. pp. 118-19.)

Lord Temple was on the point of becoming reconciled to his brother, George Grenville, with whom he and Pitt had quarrelled. Temple 'selected this important moment to clog Mr. Pitt's measures by openly rushing into connection with his brother George. . . . Mr. Pitt . . . in honour would not, or in prudence could not, enter upon administration by a breach with his brother-in-law, his benefactor, and popular associate, Temple. . . . Mr. Pitt, when Lord Temple and he parted, said pathetically, Extincti me teque, soror; populumque Patresque

Sidonios, urbemque tuam!'
(Memoirs of George III, ed. 1894, vol. iii. p. 124.)

<sup>3</sup> They had been irritated by the rejection of a bill for an increased duty on imported silks.

had arrived five minutes later. At last, after reading the proclamation, the gates of the court were thrown open, and sixty foot-soldiers marched out; the mob fled, but, being met by a party of horse, were much cut and trampled, but no lives lost. Lady Tavistock, and everything valuable in the house, have been sent out of town. On Saturday, all was pretty quiet; the Duchess was blooded, and everybody went to visit them. I hesitated, being afraid of an air of triumph; however, lest it should be construed the other way, I went last night at eight o'clock; in the square I found a great multitude, not of weavers, but seemingly of Sunday-passengers. At the gate guarded by grenadiers, I found so large a throng, that I had not only difficulty to make my way, though in my chariot, but was hissed and pelted; and in two minutes after, the glass of Lady Grosvenor's coach was broken, as those of Lady Cork's<sup>4</sup> chair were entirely demolished afterwards. I found Bedford House a perfect garrison, sustaining a siege, the court full of horse Guards, constables, and gentlemen. I told the Duke, that, however I might happen to differ with him in politics, this was a common cause, and that everybody must feel equal indignation at it. In the meantime the mob grew so riotous, that they were forced to make both horse and foot parade the square before the tumult was dispersed.

To-morrow we expect much worse. The weavers have declared they will come down to the House of Lords for redress, which they say they have been promised. A body of five hundred sailors were on the road from Portsmouth to join them, but luckily the Admiralty had notice of their intention, and stopped them. A large body of weavers

<sup>4</sup> Anne (d. 1785), daughter of Kelland Courtenay, of Painsford, Devonshire; m. (1764) Edmund Boyle, seventh Earl of Cork, from whom she was divorced in 1782.

are on the road from Norwich, and it is said have been joined by numbers in Essex; Guards are posted to prevent, if possible, their approaching the City. Another troop of manufacturers are coming from Manchester; and what is worst of all, there is such a general spirit of mutiny and dissatisfaction in the lower people, that I think we are in danger of a rebellion in the heart of the capital in a week. In the meantime, there is neither administration nor government. The King is out of town, and this is the crisis in which Mr. Pitt, who could stop every evil, chooses to be more unreasonable than ever.

Mr. Crawford<sup>5</sup>, whom you have seen at the Duchess of Grafton's, carries this, or I should not venture being so explicit. Wherever the storm may break out at first, I think Lord Bute cannot escape his share of it. The Bedfords may triumph over him, the Princess, and still higher, if they are fortunate enough to avoid the present ugly appearances; and yet how the load of odium will be increased, if they return to power! One can name many in whose situation one would not be,—not one who is not situated unpleasantly.

Adieu! my dear Lord; you shall hear as often as I can find a conveyance; but these are not topics for the post! Poor Mrs. Fitzroy has lost her eldest girl. I forgot to tell you that the young Duke of Devonshire goes to court to-morrow. Yours ever.

Wednesday evening.

I am forced to send you journals rather than letters. Mr. Crawford, who was to carry this, has put off his journey till Saturday, and I choose rather to defer my dispatch than trust it to Guerchy's courier, though he was a friend and correspondent of Madame du Deffand.

<sup>5</sup> John Cranford (d. 1814), of Auchenames. He was well known in French and English society, and

offered me that conveyance yesterday, but it is too serious to venture to their inspection.

Such precautions have been taken, and so many troops brought into town, that there has been no rising, though the sheriffs of London acquainted the Lords on Monday that a very formidable one was preparing for five o'clock the next morning. There was another tumult, indeed, at three o'clock yesterday, at Bedford House, but it was dispersed by reading the Riot Act. In the meantime, the revolution has turned round again. The ministers desired the King to commission Lord Granby, the Duke of Richmond, and Lord Waldegrave, to suppress the riots, which, in truth, was little short of asking for the power of the sword against himself. On this, his Majesty determined to name the Duke of Cumberland Captain-General; but the tranquillity of the rioters happily gave H. R. H. occasion to persuade the King to suspend that resolution. Thank God! From eleven o'clock yesterday, when I heard it, till nine at night, when I learned that the resolution had dropped, I think I never passed such anxious hours! nay, I heard it was done, and looked upon the civil war as commenced. During these events, the Duke was endeavouring to form a ministry, but, luckily, nobody would undertake it when Mr. Pitt had refused; so the King is reduced to the mortification, and it is extreme, of taking his old ministers again. They are insolent enough, you may believe; Grenville has treated his master in the most impertinent manner, and they are now actually digesting the terms that they mean to impose on their captive, and Lord Bute is the chief object of their rage; though I think Lord Holland will not escape, nor Lord Northumberland, whom they treat as an encourager of the rioters. Both he and my Lady went on Monday night to Bedford House, and were received with every mark of insult. The Duke turned his back on the Earl, without speaking to him, and he was kept standing an hour exposed to all their raillery. Still I have a more extraordinary event to tell you than all I have related. Lord Temple and George Grenville were reconciled yesterday morning, by the intervention of Augustus Hervey; and, perhaps, the next thing you will hear may be that Lord Temple is sent by this ministry to Ireland, though Lord Weymouth is again much talked of for it.

The report of Norwich and Manchester weavers on the road is now doubted. If Lord Bute is banished, I suppose the Duke of Bedford will become the hero of this very mob, and every act of power which they have executed, let who will have been the adviser, will be forgotten. It will be entertaining to see Lord Temple supporting Lord Halifax on general warrants!

You have more than once seen your old master<sup>6</sup> reduced to surrender up his closet to a cabal—but never with such circumstances of insult, indignity, and humiliation! For our little party, it is more humble than ever. Still I prefer that state to what I dread; I mean, seeing your brother embarked in a desperate administration. It was proposed first to make him Secretary at War, then Secretary of State, but he declined both. Yet I trembled, lest he should think himself bound in honour to obey the commands of the King and Duke of Cumberland; but, to my great joy, that alarm is over, unless the triumphant faction exact more than the King can possibly suffer. It will rejoice you, however, my dear Lord, to hear that Mr. Conway is perfectly restored to the King's favour; and that if he continues in opposition, it will not be against the King, but a most abominable faction, who, having raged against the constitution and their country to pay court to Lord Bute, have even thrown off that paltry mask, and avowedly hoisted the standard of their own power. Till the King has signed their demands, one cannot look upon this scene as closed.

<sup>6</sup> George II.

Friday evening.

You will think, my dear Lord, and it is natural you should, that I write my letters at once, and compose one part with my prophecies, and the other with the completion of them; but you must recollect that I understand this country pretty well,—attend closely to what passes,—have very good intelligence,—and know the characters of the actors thoroughly. A little sagacity added to such foundation easily carries one's sight a good way; but you will care for my narrative more than my reflections, so I proceed.

On Wednesday, the ministers dictated their terms; you will not expect much moderation, and, accordingly, there was not a grain: they demanded a royal promise of never consulting Lord Bute; secondly, the dismissal of Mr. Mekinsy<sup>7</sup> from the direction of Scotland; thirdly, and lastly, for they could go no further, the crown itself—or, in their words, the immediate nomination of Lord Granby to be Captain-General. You may figure the King's indignation—for himself, for his favourite, for his uncle. In my own opinion, the proposal of grounds for taxing his Majesty himself hereafter with breaking his word, was the bitterest affront of all. He expressed his anger and astonishment, and bade them return at ten at night for his answer; but, before that, he sent the Chancellor to the junto, consenting to displace Mekinsy, refusing to promise not to consult Lord Bute, though acquiescing to his not interfering in business, but with a peremptory refusal to the article of Lord Granby. The rebels took till next morning to advise on their answer; when they gave up the point of Lord Granby, and contented themselves with the modification on the chapter of Lord Bute. However, not to be too complimentary, they demanded Mackenzie's place for Lord Lorn, and the instant removal of Lord Holland<sup>8</sup>; both which have been granted. Charles Townshend is Paymaster, and Lord Weymouth Viceroy of Ireland<sup>9</sup>; so Lord Northumberland remains on the pavé, which, as there is no place vacant for him, it was not necessary to stipulate. The Duchess of Bedford, with colours flying, issued out of her garrison yesterday, and took possession of the Drawing-room. To-day their Majesty-Graces are gone to Woburn; but as the Duchess is a perfect Methodist against all suspicious characters, it is said, to-day, that Lord Talbot is to be added to the list of proscriptions, and now they think themselves established for ever.—Do they so?

<sup>7</sup> James Stuart-Mackenzie, Lord Privy Seal for Scotland.

Lord Temple declares himself the warmest friend of the present administration;—there is a mystery still to be cleared up,—and, perhaps, a little to the mortification of Bedford House.—We shall see.

The Duke of Cumberland is retired to Windsor: your brother gone to Park Place: I go to Strawberry to-morrow, lest people should not think me a great man too. I don't know whether I shall not even think it necessary to order myself a fit of the gout.

I have received your short letter of the 16th, with the memorial of the family of Brebeuf;—now my head will have a little leisure, I will examine it, and see if I can do anything in the affair. In that letter you say, you have been a month without hearing from any of your friends. I little expected to be taxed on that head: I have written you volumes almost every day; my last dates have been of April 11th, 20th, May 5th, 12th, and 16th. I beg you will look over them, and send me word exactly, and I beg you not to omit it, whether any of these are missing. Three of them I trusted to Guerchy, but took care they should contain nothing which it signified whether seen or not on t'other side of the water, though I did not care they should be perused on this. I had the caution not to let him have this, though ; by the eagerness with which he proffered both to-day and yesterday, to send anything by his couriers, I suspected he wished to help them to better intelligence than he could give them himself. He even told me he should have another courier depart on Tuesday next ; but I excused myself, on pretence of having too much to write at once, and shall send this, and a letter your brother has left me, by Mr. Crawford, though he does not set out till Sunday ; but you had better wait for it from him, than from the Duc de Choiseul. Pray commend my discretion—you see I grow a consummate politician ; but don't approve of it too much, lest I only send you letters as prudent as your own.

<sup>8</sup> From the post of Paymaster-General.

<sup>9</sup> Lord Weymouth did not go to Ireland.

You may acquaint Lady Holland with the dismissal of her Lord, if she has not heard it, he being at Kingsgate<sup>10</sup>. Your secretary<sup>11</sup> is likely to be prime minister in Ireland. Two months ago the new Viceroy himself was going to France for debt, leaving his wife and children to be maintained by her mother<sup>12</sup>.

I will be much obliged to you, my dear Lord, if you will contrive to pay Lady Stanhope for the medals ; they cost, I think, but 4*l.* 7*s.*, or thereabout—but I have lost the note.

Adieu ! here ends volume the first. Omnia mutantur, sed

<sup>10</sup> Lord Holland's seat on the coast of Kent, between Margate and Broadstairs.

<sup>11</sup> Sir Charles Bunbury.

<sup>12</sup> The Dowager Duchess of Portland.

non mutamur in illis. Princess Amelia, who has a little veered round to north-west, and by Bedford, does not speak tenderly of her brother—but if some families are reconciled, others are disunited. The Keppels are at open war with the Keppels, and Lady Mary Coke weeps with one eye over Lady Betty Mackenzie, and smiles with t'other on Lady Dalkeith<sup>13</sup>; but the first eye is the sincerest. The Duke of Richmond, in exactly the same proportion, is divided between his sisters, Holland and Bunbury.

Thank you much for your kindness about Mr. T. Walpole—I have not had a moment's time to see him, but will do full justice to your goodness.

Yours ever,
H. W.

Pray remember the dates of my letters—you will be strangely puzzled for a clew, if one of them has miscarried. Sir Charles Bunbury is not to be Secretary for Ireland, but Thurlow<sup>14</sup> the lawyer: they are to stay five years without returning. Lord Lorn has declined, and Lord Frederic Campbell is to be Lord Privy Seal for Scotland. Lord Waldegrave, they say, Chamberlain to the Queen.

1027. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, May 25, 1765, sent by way of Paris.

My last I think was of the 16th. Since that we have had events of almost every sort. A whole administration dismissed, taken again, suspended, confirmed; an insurrection; and we have been at the eve of a civil war. Many thousand weavers rose, on a bill for their relief being thrown out of the House of Lords by the Duke of Bedford. For four days they were suffered to march about the town with colours displayed, petitioning the King, surrounding the House of Lords, mobbing and wounding the Duke of Bedford, and at last besieging his house, which, with his family, was narrowly saved from destruction. At last it grew a regular siege and blockade; but by garrisoning it with horse and foot literally, and calling in several regiments, the tumult is appeased. Lord Bute rashly taking advantage of this unpopularity of his enemies, advised the King to notify to his ministers that he intended to dismiss them,—and by this step, no succedaneum being prepared, reduced his Majesty to the alternative of laying his crown at the foot of Mr. Pitt, or of the Duke of Bedford; and as it proved at last, of both. The Duke of Cumberland was sent for, and was sent to Mr. Pitt, from whom, though offering almost carte blanche, he received a peremptory refusal. The next measure was to form a ministry from the opposition. Willing were they, but timid. Without Mr. Pitt nobody would engage. The King was forced to desire his old ministers to stay where they were. They, who had rallied their very dejected courage, demanded terms, and hard ones indeed—promise of never consulting Lord Bute, dismissal of his brother, and the appointment of Lord Granby to be Captain-General—so soon did those tools of prerogative talk to their exalted sovereign in the language of the Parliament to Charles I.

<sup>13</sup> Charles Townshend, Lady Dalkeith's husband, had been appointed Paymaster of the Forces, while Mr. Mackenzie had lost his place.

<sup>14</sup> Edward Thurlow (d. 1806), cr. Baron Thurlow, of Ashfield, Suffolk, 1778; Solicitor-General, 1770-71; Attorney-General, 1771-78; Lord Chancellor, 1778-92 (except from April-Dec. 1783). He was never Chief Secretary for Ireland.

The King, rather than resign his sceptre on the first summons, determined to name his uncle Captain-General. Thus the commanders at least were ready on each side; but the ministers, who by the treaty of Paris showed how little military glory was the object of their ambition, have contented themselves with seizing St. James's without bloodshed. They gave up their general, upon condition Mr. Mackenzie and Lord Holland were sacrificed to them, and, tacitly, Lord Northumberland<sup>1</sup>, whose government they bestow on Lord Weymouth without furnishing another place to the Earl, as was intended for him. All this is granted. Still there are inexplicable riddles. In the height of negotiation, Lord Temple was reconciled to his brother George, and declares himself a fast friend to the late and present ministry. What part Mr. Pitt will act is not yet known—probably not a hostile one; but here are fine seeds of division and animosity sown!

I have thus in six words told you the matter of volumes. You must analyse them yourself, unless you have patience to wait till the consequences are the comment. Don't you recollect very similar passages in the time of Mr. Pelham, the Duke of Newcastle, Lord Granville, and Mr. Fox? But those wounds did not penetrate so deep as these! Here are all the great and opulent noble families engaged on one side or the other. Here is the King insulted and prisoner, his mother stigmatized, his uncle affronted, his favourite persecuted. It is again a scene of Bohuns, Montforts, and Plantagenets.

While I am writing, I receive yours of the 4th, containing the revolutions in the fabric and pictures of the Palace Pitti<sup>2</sup>. My dear Sir, make no excuse; we each write what we have to write; and if our letters remain, posterity will read the catastrophes of St. James's and the Palace Pitti with equal indifference, however differently they affect you and me now. For my part, though agitated like Ludlow<sup>3</sup> or my Lord Clarendon on the events of the day, I have more curiosity about Havering in the Bower, the LETTER 1027.—<sup>1</sup> The Lord Northumberland's son was married to Lord Bute's daughter. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> The palace of the Great Duke at Florence. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Edmund Ludlow, the regicide (d. 1692), author of Memoirs of his own times.

jointure house of ancient royal dowagers, than about Queen Isabella herself. Mr. Wilkes, whom you mention, will be still more interested, when he hears that his friend Lord Temple has shaken hands with his foes Halifax and Sandwich; and I don't believe that any amnesty is stipulated for the exile. Churchill, Wilkes's poet, used to wish that he was at liberty to attack Mr. Pitt and Charles Townshend,—the moment is come, but Churchill is gone! Charles Townshend has got Lord Holland's place<sup>4</sup>—and yet the people will again and again believe that nothing is intended but their interest!

When I recollect all I have seen and known, I seem to be as old as Methuselah: indeed I was born in politics,—but I hope not to die in them. With all my experience, these last five weeks have taught me more than any other ten years; accordingly, a retreat is the whole scope of my wishes; but not yet arrived.

Your amiable sister, Mrs. Foote, is settled in town; I saw her last night at the Opera with Lady Ailesbury. She is enchanted with Manzuoli—and you know her approbation is a test, who has heard all the great singers, learnt of all, and sings with as much taste as any of them. Adieu!

1028. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Strawberry Hill, May 26, 1765.

IF one of the one hundred events, and one hundredth part of the one hundred thousand reports that have passed, and been spread in this last month, have reached your solitary hill, you must be surprised at not a single word from me during that period. The number of events is my excuse. Though mine is the pen of a pretty ready writer, I could not keep pace with the revolutions of each day, each hour. I had not time to begin the narrative, much less to finish it. No, I must keep the whole to tell you at once, or to read it to you, for I think I shall write the history; which, let me tell you, Buckinger himself could not have crowded into a nut-shell.

<sup>4</sup> Paymaster of the Forces. Walpole.

For your part, you will be content, though the house of Montagu has not made an advantageous figure in this political warfare—yet it is crowned with victory, and laurels you know compensate for every scar. You went out of town frightened out of your senses at the giant prerogative—alack! he is grown so tame, that, as you said of our earthquake, you may stroke him. George the Third is the true successor of George the Second, and inherits all his grandfather's humiliations—indeed, they are attended with circumstances a little more cutting. The Regency Bill, not quite calculated with that intent, has produced four regents, king Bedford, king Grenville, king Halifax, and king Twitcher<sup>1</sup>. Lord Holland is turned out, and Stuart McKinsy. Charles Townshend is Paymaster, and Lord Bute annihilated—and all done without the help of the Whigs. You love to guess what one is going to say—now you may guess what I am not going to say. Your newspapers perhaps have given you a long roll of opposition names, who were coming into place, and so all the world thought; but the wind turned quite round, and left them on the strand, and just where they were, except in opposition, which is declared to be at an end. Enigma as all this may sound, the key would open it all to you in the twinkling of an administration. In the meantime, we have family

LETTER 1028.—<sup>1</sup> A name bestowed on Lord Sandwich after his treacherous conduct towards Wilkes:—‘The Beggar’s Opera being performed at Covent Garden . . . the whole audience, when Macheath says, “That Jemmy Twitcher should peach me,

I own surprises me,” burst out into an applause of application; and the nickname of Jemmy Twitcher stuck by the Earl so as almost to occasion the disuse of his title.’ (Memoirs of George III, ed. 1894, vol. i. p. 249.)

reconciliations without end. The King and the Duke of Cumberland have been shut up together day and night; Lord Temple and George Grenville are sworn brothers—well, but Mr. Pitt? where is he? In the clouds, for aught I know, in one of which he may descend like the kings of Bantam, and take quiet possession of the throne again.

As a thorough-bass to these squabbles, we have had an insurrection and a siege. Bedford House, though garrisoned by horse and foot Guards, was on the point of being taken. The besieged are in their turn triumphant, and, if anybody now was to publish Droit le Duc<sup>2</sup>, I do not think the House of Lords would censure his book. Indeed the regents may do what they please, and turn out whom they will; I see nothing to resist them. Lord Bute will not easily be tempted to rebel, when the last struggle has cost him so dear.

I am sorry for some of my friends, to whom I wished more fortune. For myself, I am but just where I should have been, had they succeeded. 'Tis satisfaction enough to me to be delivered from politics; which you know I have long detested. When I was tranquil enough to write Castles of Otranto in the midst of grave nonsense and foolish councils of war, I am not likely to disturb myself with the divisions of the court where I am not connected with a soul. As it has proved to be the interest of the present ministers, however contrary to their former views, to lower the crown, they will scarce be in a hurry to aggrandize it again. That will satisfy you; and I, you know, am satisfied if I have anything to laugh at—'tis a lucky age for a man who is so easily contented.

The poor Chute has had another relapse, but is out of bed again. I am thinking of my journey to France; but, as Mr. Conway has a mind I should wait for him, I don't know whether it will take place before the autumn. I will by no means release you from your promise of making me a visit here before I go.

<sup>2</sup> A reference to Brecknock's Droit le Roy, censured by the House of Lords in Feb. 1764. See p. 21.

Poor Mr. Bentley, I doubt, is under the greatest difficulties of anybody. His poem, which he modestly delivered over to immortality, must be cut and turned; for Lord Halifax and Lord Bute cannot sit in the same canto together: then the horns and hoofs that he had bestowed on Lord Temple must be pared away, and beams of glory distributed over his whole person. 'Tis a dangerous thing to write political panegyrics or satires. It draws the unhappy bard into a thousand scrapes and contradictions. The edifices and inscriptions at Stowe should be a lesson not to erect monuments to the living. I will not place an ossuary in my garden for my cat, before her bones are ready to be placed in it. I hold contradictions to be as essential to the definition of a political man, as any visible or featherless quality can be to man in general. Good night!

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

28th.

I shall send this by the coach; so whatever comes with it is only to make bundle. Here are some lines that came into my head yesterday in the postchaise, as I was reading in the Annual Register<sup>3</sup> an account of a fountain-tree in one of the Canary Islands, which never dies, and supplies the inhabitants with water.—I don't warrant the longevity, though the hypostatic union of a fountain may eternize the tree.

In climes adust, where rivers never flow,
Where constant suns repel approaching snow,
How Nature's various and inventive hand
Can pour unheard-of moisture o'er the land!

<sup>3</sup> See Ann. Reg. 1764, p. 115.

Immortal plants she bids on rocks arise,
And from the dropping branches streams supplies.
The thirsty native sucks the falling show'r,
Nor asks for juicy fruit or blooming flow'r;
But haply doubts, when travellers maintain,
That Europe's forests melt not into rain.

1029. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Strawberry Hill, June 10, 1765. Eleven at night.

I AM just come out of the garden in the most oriental of all evenings, and from breathing odours beyond those of Araby. The acacias, which the Arabians have the sense to worship, are covered with blossoms, the honeysuckles dangle from every tree in festoons, the seringas are thickets of sweets, and the new-cut hay of the field in the garden tempers the balmy gales with simple freshness, while a thousand sky-rockets launched into the air at Ranelagh or Marybone illuminate the scene, and give it an air of Haroun Alraschid's paradise—I was not quite so content by daylight: some foreigners dined here, and, though they admired our verdure, it mortified me by its brownness; we have not had a drop of rain this month to cool the tip of our daisies. My company was Lady Lyttelton, Lady Schaub, a Madame de Juliac from the Pyreneans, very handsome, not a girl, and of Lady Schaub's mould; the Comte de Caraman, nephew of Madame de Mirepoix, a Monsieur de Claussonnette, and General Schouallow, the favourite of the late Czarina—absolute favourite for a dozen years, without making an enemy. In truth, he is very amiable, humble, and modest. Had he been ambitious, he might have mounted the throne. As he was not, you may imagine they have plucked his plumes a good deal. There is a little air of melancholy about him, and, if I am not mistaken, some secret wishes for the fall of the present murderess, which, if it were civil to suppose, I could heartily join with him in hoping for. As we have still liberty enough left to dazzle a Russian, he seems charmed with England, and perhaps liked even this place the more as belonging to the son of one that, like himself, had been prime minister. If he has no more ambition left than I have, he must taste the felicity of being a private man! What has Lord Bute gained, but the knowledge of how many ungrateful sycophants favour and power can create?

If you have received the parcel that I consigned to Richard Brown for you, you will have found an explanation of my long silence. Thank you for being alarmed for my health.

The day after to-morrow I go to Park Place for four or five days, and soon after to Goodwood. My French journey is still in suspense; Lord Hertford talks of coming over for a fortnight; perhaps I may go back with him; but I have determined nothing yet, till I see farther into the present chaos, that somehow or other I may take my leave of politics for ever; for can anything be so wearisome as politics on the account of others? Good night! shall I not see you here?

Yours ever,

H. W.

1030. TO LADY HERVEY.

Strawberry Hill, June 11, 1765.

I AM almost as much ashamed, Madam, to plead the true cause of my faults towards your Ladyship, as to have been guilty of any neglect. It is scandalous, at my age, to have been carried backwards and forwards to balls and suppers and parties by very young people, as I was all last week. My resolutions of growing old and staid are admirable: I wake with a sober plan, and intend to pass the day with my friends—then comes the Duke of Richmond, and hurries me down to Whitehall to dinner—then the Duchess of Grafton sends for me to loo in Upper Grosvenor Street—before I can get thither, I am begged to step to Kensington, to give Mrs. Anne Pitt my opinion about a bow window—after the loo, I am to march back to Whitehall to supper—and after that, am to walk with Miss Pelham on the terrace till two in the morning, because it is moonlight and her chair is not come. All this does not help my morning laziness; and, by the time I have breakfasted, fed my birds and my squirrels, and dressed, there is an auction ready. In short, Madam, this was my life last week, and is I think every week, with the addition of forty episodes.—Yet, ridiculous as it is, I send it your Ladyship, because I had rather you should laugh at me than be angry. I cannot offend you in intention, but I fear my sins of omission are equal to many a good Christian's. Pray forgive me. I really will begin to be between forty and fifty by the time I am fourscore: and I truly believe I shall bring my resolutions within compass; for I have not chalked out any particular business that will take me above forty years more; so that, if I do not get acquainted with the grandchildren of all the present age, I shall lead a quiet sober life yet before I die.

As Mr. Bateman's is the kingdom of flowers, I must not wish to send you any; else, Madam, I could load waggons with acacias, honeysuckles, and seringas. Madame de Juliac, who dined here yesterday, owned that the climate and odours equalled Languedoc. I fear the want of rain made the turf put her in mind of it, too. Monsieur de Caraman entered into the Gothic spirit of the place, and really seemed pleased, which was more than I expected; for, between you and me, Madam, our friends the French have seldom eyes for anything they have not been used to see all their lives. I beg my warmest compliments to your host and Lord Ilchester. I wish your Ladyship all pleasure and health, and am, notwithstanding my idleness,

Your most faithful and devoted humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1031. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, June 26, 1765.

You have known your country, my dear Sir, in more perilous situations, but you never knew it in a more distracted one in time of peace than it is in at present. Nor had I ever more difficulty to describe its position to you. Times of party have their great outlines, which even such historians as Hollingshed or Smollett can seize. But a season of faction is another guess thing. It depends on personal characters, intrigues, and minute circumstances, which make little noise, and escape the eyes of the generality. The details are as much too numerous for a letter, as, when the moment is past, they become too trifling and uninteresting for history. I can only endeavour to preserve the thread, but it is impossible to develop all its windings.

After the King had been obliged to take back his old ministers, the hard terms they imposed upon him, added to their late insults, made him treat them with the greatest coldness. He not only smiled on the opposition, but bestowed every employment that fell on the Duke of Cumberland's or Lord Bute's friends. This situation was not likely to last. Accordingly, this day fortnight, the Duke of Bedford, in the name of himself and his three colleagues<sup>1</sup>, prescribed a month to his Majesty, in which he must determine whether he would take a new administration, or keeping his old ministers, smile on them and frown on their adversaries—a hard lesson to a prince, whom these very men had complimented with so much prerogative! He made no answer, but on the following Monday sent the Duke of Grafton to invite Mr. Pitt to court. He went, and in four audiences found such facilities to all his demands, that a change was believed infallible. This day was even marked in the general expectation as the era of a new administration. I, who am not in the list of aspirants, had stayed in the country till this very day, wishing for the event, but content to know it when it happened. When I arrived, at four o'clock, to my surprise I heard that Lord Temple, who was to have the Treasury, had been yesterday with the King, and declared he could not take it, giving no other reason than that he had a delicacy which he could not mention, and which must ever remain a secret. The extraordinariness of the declaration, after Mr. Pitt had gone so far, amazes everybody, though this is the third negotiation of individually the same sort that has been broken off thus abruptly. The mysterious words are commonly supposed to allude to Lord Temple's reconciliation with his brother; yet why he should not plead that, is not easily solved, unless he has connected with the Duke of Bedford too. Mr. Pitt's declarations and conduct seem not to tally with such a league. In this very transaction he has declared himself hostilely against the Duke of Bedford's people; and in an audience of the King this very morning, expressed himself still ready to come in, if Lord Temple would—but it is an intrigue which time alone can explain.

LETTER 1031.—<sup>1</sup> George Grenville, Lord Halifax, and Lord Sandwich. Walpole.

Thus you see all is afloat again. Whether a new administration can or will be formed without Mr. Pitt; whether the King must submit again to his old ministers, what new terms they will exact, or whether he will grant them, is yet uncertain. Should he bend to all they demand, it can but aggravate the wound, not close it. Consequently no such system can be looked upon as permanent. My own opinion is, that after some more convulsions, it will end in an administration of Mr. Pitt, Lord Temple, and George Grenville, unless one or more of them should die.

You know, my dear Sir, I never expect you to answer me on these delicate subjects. I even send this by a safe conveyance to Lord Hertford at Paris, as I did a former one, which I hope you received.

How I envy you who hear nothing but the distant rumour of these unpleasant scenes! How vexatious to me to be engaged in them! When men are involved in politics from ambition, interest, or inclination, they must take the bitter with the sweet; I, who have been forced into them by principle and friendship, lament the tranquillity I have lost, and for which nothing can pay me but the restoration of it. I sigh for the moment of recovering my liberty, and fervently vow to myself never to be in a situation more in which even duty can call upon me to take a part. I could explain and justify this determination in the most ample manner; but the time is not yet come for doing it. Adieu!

1032. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, Saturday night.

I MUST scrawl a line to you, though with the utmost difficulty, for I am in my bed—but I see they have foolishly put it into the Chronicle that I am dangerously ill; and as I know you take in that paper, and are one of the very, very few, of whose tenderness and friendship I have not the smallest doubt, I give myself pain, rather than let you feel a moment's unnecessarily. It is true, I have had a terrible attack of the gout in my stomach, head, and both feet, but have truly never been in danger, any more than one must be in such a situation. My head and stomach are perfectly well; my feet far from it. I have kept my room since this day se'nnight, and my bed these three days, but hope to get up to-morrow. You know my writing and my veracity, and that I would not deceive you. As to my person, it will not be so easy to reconnoitre it, for I question whether any of it will remain—it was easy to annihilate so airy a substance. Adieu!

Yours most truly,
H. WALPOLE.

1033. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Wednesday noon, July 3, 1765.

THE footing part of my dance with my shocking partner the gout is almost over. I had little pain there this last night, and got, at twice, about three hours' sleep; but, whenever I waked, found my head very bad, which Mr. Graham thinks gouty too. The fever is still very high; but the same sage is of opinion, with my Lady Londonderry, that if it was a fever from death, I should die; but as it is only a fever from the gout, I shall live. I think so too, and hope that, like the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough, they are so inseparable, that when one goes t'other will.

Tell Lady Ailesbury, I fear it will be long before I shall be able to compass all your terraces again. The weather is very hot, and I have the comfort of a window open all day. I have got a bushel of roses too, and a new scarlet nightingale, which does not sing Nancy Dawson from morning to night. Perhaps you think all these poor pleasures; but you are ignorant what a provocative the gout is, and what charms it can bestow on a moment's amusement! Oh, it beats all the refinements of a Roman sensualist. It has made even my watch a darling plaything; I strike it as often as a child does. Then the disorder of my sleep diverts me when I am awake. I dreamt that I went to see Madame de Bentheim at Paris, and that she had the prettiest palace in the world, built like a pavilion, of yellow laced with blue; that I made love to her daughter, whom I called Mademoiselle Bleue et Jaune, and thought it very clever.

My next reverie was very serious, and lasted half an hour after I was awake; which you will perhaps think a little light-headed, and so do I. I thought Mr. Pitt had had a conference with Madame de Bentheim, and granted all her demands. I rung for Louis at six in the morning, and wanted to get up and inform myself of what had been kept so secret from me. You must know, that all these visions of Madame de Bentheim flowed from George Selwyn telling me last night, that she had carried most of her points, and was returning. What stuff I tell you! But, alas! I have nothing better to do, sitting on my bed, and wishing to forget how brightly the sun shines, when I cannot be at Strawberry.

1034. TO THE COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK.

July 3, 1765.

YOUR Ladyship's goodness to me on all occasions makes me flatter myself that I am not doing an impertinence in telling you I am alive, though, after what I have suffered; you may be sure there cannot be much of me left.

The gout has been a little in my stomach, much more in my head, but luckily never out of my right foot, and for twelve, thirteen, and seventeen hours together, insisting upon having its way as absolutely as my Lady Blandford. The extremity of pain seems to be over, though I sometimes think my tyrant puts in his claim to t'other foot; and surely he is, like most tyrants, mean as well as cruel, or he could never have thought the leg of a lark such a prize.

The fever, the tyrant's first minister, has been at least as vexatious as his master, and makes use of this hot day to plague me more; yet, as I was sending a servant to Twickenham, I could not help scrawling out a few lines to ask how your Ladyship does, to tell you how I am, and to lament the roses, strawberries, and banks of the river.

I know nothing, Madam, of any kings or ministers but those I have mentioned, and their administration I fervently hope will be changed soon; and for all others I shall be very indifferent. Had a great prince come to my bedside yesterday, I should have begged that the honour might last a very few minutes.

I am,

Madam,

Your Ladyship's

Most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1035. TO THE COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK.

MADAM,

Arlington Street, July 9, 1765.

Though instead of getting better, as I flattered myself I should, I have gone through two very painful and sleepless nights, yet as I give audience here in my bed to new ministers<sup>1</sup> and foreign ministers, I think it full as much my duty to give an account of myself to those who are so good as to wish me well. I am reduced to nothing but bones and spirits, but the latter make me bear the inconvenience of the former, though they, I mean my bones, lie in a heap over one another like the bits of ivory at the game of straws.

LETTER 1035.—Collated with original in British Museum.

<sup>1</sup> The Rockingham ministry took office on July 8.

It is very melancholy, at the instant I was getting quit of politics, to be visited with the only thing that is still more plaguing. However, I believe the fit of politics going off makes me support the new-comer better. Neither of them indeed will leave me plumper, but if they will both leave me at peace, your Ladyship knows it is all I have ever desired.

The chiefs of the new ministry were to have kissed hands to-day; but Mr. Charles Townshend, who, besides not knowing either of his own minds, has his brother's minds to know too, could not determine last night. Both brothers are gone to the King to-day.

I was much concerned to hear so bad an account of your Ladyship's health. Other people would wish you a severe fit, which is a very cheap wish to them who do not feel it: I, who do, advise you to be content with it in detail.

Adieu! Madam; pray keep a little summer for me. I will give you a bushel of politics, when I come to Marble Hill, for a teacup of strawberries and cream.

Mr. Chetwynd, I suppose, is making the utmost advantage of my absence, frisking and cutting capers before Miss Hotham<sup>2</sup>, and advising her not to throw herself away on a decrepit old man. Well, well, fifty years hence he may begin to be an old man too, and then I shall not pity him, though I own he is the best-humoured lad in the world now.

Your Ladyship's

Most obedient servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

<sup>2</sup> Lady Suffolk's great-niece.

1036. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Arlington Street, July 11, 1765.

You are so good, I must write you a few lines ; and you will excuse my not writing many, my posture is so uncomfortable, lying on a couch by the side of my bed, and writing on the bed. I have in this manner been what they call out of bed for two days, but I mend very slowly, and get no strength in my feet at all—however, I must have patience.

Thank you for your kind offer ; but, my dear Sir, you can do me no good but what you always do me, in coming to see me. I should hope that would be before I go to France, whither I certainly go the beginning of September, if not sooner. The great and happy change—happy, I hope, for this country—is actually begun. The Duke of Bedford, George Grenville, and the two Secretaries are discarded. Lord Rockingham is First Lord of the Treasury, Dowdswell Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke of Grafton and Mr. Conway Secretaries of State. You need not wish me joy, for I know you do. There is a good deal more to come, and what is better, regulation of general warrants, and undoing of at least some of the mischiefs these wretches have been committing—some, indeed, is past recovery ! I long to talk it all over with you ; though it is hard that when I may write what I will, I am not able.

The poor Chute is relapsed again, and we are no comfort to one another but by messages. An offer of Ireland was sent to Lord Hertford last night from his brother's<sup>1</sup> office. Adieu !

Yours ever,
H. W.

1037. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, July 12, 1765.

IF you knew with what difficulty and pain I write to you, you would allow, my dear Sir, that I have some zeal for your satisfaction. I have been extremely ill for these last sixteen days with the gout all over me, in head, stomach, and both feet; but as it never budged from the latter, it soon attracted all the venom from the upper parts. Oh, it is a venomous devil! I have lain upon a couch for two days, but I question whether I shall be so alert to-day, as I have had a great deal of pain in the night, and little sleep. Still, I must write to you, as it is both for your satisfaction and my own, and as this is the first moment that I have enjoyed the liberty of the post for these three years. We may say what we will; I may launch out, and even you need not be discreet, when our letters pass through Mr. Conway's office. He has already himself told you in form that he is your principal, and I repeat how glad of it I am for your sake, as well as for all others. I told him last night that I believed the Duke of York had obtained the promise of a red riband for you, and begged that promise at least of the late odious ministers might be fulfilled, and that none of our new aspirants might be thrust in before you. He readily, with most kind expressions towards you, promised me his interest.

Well! at last the four tyrants<sup>1</sup> are gone! undone by their own insolence, and unpitied. Their arrogance to the King, and proscriptions of everybody but their own crew, forced his Majesty to try anything rather than submit to such taskmasters. Mr. Pitt, who was ready and willing to have assumed the burthen, was disappointed by the treachery of Lord Temple, who has reconciled and leagued himself with his brother George. In this distress, the Duke of Cumberland has persuaded the opposition to accept and form a ministry. Without Mr. Pitt, they were unwilling; but pressed and encouraged by Mr. Pitt, and fearing the crown should be reduced to worse shifts rather than again bend to the yoke, they have submitted, and everything promises fairer than could be expected. The Duke of Bedford, Grenville, and the two Secretaries are already dismissed, and their places filled by Lord Winchelsea, Lord Rockingham and Mr. Dowdeswell, as First Commissioners of the Admiralty, and Treasury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke of Grafton and Mr. Conway. The list of ins and outs will be much more considerable by degrees, though not rapidly, nor executed with the merciless hand of late years, for the present system is composed of men as much more virtuous in that respect as in every other than their predecessors. Nobody has resigned yet but those immediately connected with the fallen, as Lord Gower, Lord Thomond<sup>2</sup>, and Lord Weymouth, and who would not have been suffered to stay if they had desired it.

LETTER 1037.—<sup>1</sup> Bedford, Sandwich, Halifax, and Grenville.

The crown of Ireland is offered to Lord Hertford. All this sets my family in an illustrious light enough: yet it does not dazzle me. My wishes and intentions are just the same as they were. Moderation, privacy, and quiet, sum up all my future views; and having seen my friends landed, my little cock-boat shall waft me to Strawberry, as soon as I am able to get into it. The gout, they tell me, is to ensure me a length of years and health, but as I fear I must now and then renew the patent at the original expense, I am not much flattered by so dear an annuity. You may judge of my sensations when I tell you I reckon the greatest miracle ever performed was that of bidding the cripple take up his bed and walk—I could as soon do the former as the latter.

<sup>2</sup> Percy Windham O'Brien, Earl of Thomond, brother of Lord Egremont and of Mrs. George Grenville. Walpole.

Since I began to write, I hear that this morning have kissed hands, Lord Ashburnham for the Great Wardrobe, in room of Lord Despencer; Lord Besborough and Lord Grantham Postmasters, in the places of Lord Hyde and Lord Trevor; Lord Villiers<sup>3</sup> as Vice-Chamberlain, instead of old Will Finch, who I believe has a pension; and Lord Scarborough, who succeeds Lord Thomond in the Cofferer's office. You will say that all this is strongly tinctured with peerage—it is true, but the House of Commons will have its dole, though not yet, as folks do not like a re-election depending for six months.

The Duke of Bolton<sup>4</sup> the other morning—nobody knows why or wherefore, except that there is a good deal of madness in the blood—sat himself down upon the floor in his dressing-room, and shot himself through the head. What is more remarkable is, that it is the same house and same chamber in which Lord Scarborough<sup>5</sup> performed the same exploit. I do not believe that shooting one's self through the head is catching, or that any contagion lies in a wainscot that makes one pull a suicide-trigger, but very possibly the idea might revert and operate on the brain of a splenetic man. I am glad he had not a blue Garter but a red one, as the more plenty the sooner one gets to Florence.

This is a long epistle, in my condition. Pray, unseal and decipher your lips now; the Tower has no longer the least air of the Bastille: Halifax, Sandwich, and general warrants are sent to the devil, though I believe Sandwich

<sup>3</sup> Only son of the Earl of Jersey.
Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> Charles Poulett, Duke of Bolton.
Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> Richard Lumley, Earl of Scarborough, shot himself in 1741. Walpole.

will contrive to return like Belphegor, even though he should be obliged to marry his own wife<sup>6</sup> again, but he can never get rid of the smell of brimstone. Adieu !

1038. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Strawberry Hill, July 28, 1765.

THE less one is disposed, if one has any sense, to talk of oneself to people that inquire only out of compliment, and do not listen to the answer, the more satisfaction one feels in indulging a self-complacency, by sighing to those that really sympathize with our griefs. Do not think it is pain that makes me give this low-spirited air to my letter. No, it is the prospect of what is to come, not the sensation of what is passing, that affects me. The loss of youth is melancholy enough ; but to enter into old age through the gate of infirmity most disheartening. My health and spirits make me take but slight notice of the transition, and, under the persuasion of temperance being a talisman, I marched boldly on towards the descent of the hill, knowing I must fall at last, but not suspecting that I should stumble by the way. This confession explains the mortification I feel. A month's confinement to one who never kept his bed a day, is a stinging lesson, and has humbled my insolence to almost indifference. Judge, then, how little I interest myself about public events. I know nothing of them since I came hither, where I had not only the disappointment of not growing better, but a bad return in one of my feet, so that I am still wrapped up and upon a couch. It was the more unlucky as Lord Hertford is come to England for a very few days. He has offered to come to me ; but as I then should see him only for some minutes, I propose being carried to town to-morrow. It will be so long before I can expect to be able to travel, that my French journey will certainly not take place so soon as I intended ; and if Lord Hertford goes to Ireland, I shall still be more fluctuating ; for though the Duke and Duchess of Richmond will replace them at Paris, and are as eager to have me with them, I have had so many more years heaped upon me within this month, that I have not the conscience to trouble young people, when I can no longer be as juvenile as they are. Indeed I shall think myself decrepit, till I again saunter into the garden in my slippers and without my hat in all weathers, a point I am determined to regain, if possible ; for even this experience cannot make me resign my temperance and my hardiness. I am tired of the world, its politics, its pursuits, and its pleasures ; but it will cost me some struggles before I submit to be tender and careful. Christ ! can I ever stoop to the regimen of old age ? I do not wish to dress up a withered person, nor drag it about to public places ; but to sit in one's room, clothed warmly, expecting visits from folks I don't wish to see, and tended and flattered by relations impatient for one's death ! let the gout do its worst as expeditiously as it can : it would be more welcome in my stomach than in my limbs. I am not made to bear a course of nonsense and advice ; but must play the fool in my own way to the last, alone with all my heart, if I cannot be with the very few I wish to see : but, to depend for comfort on others, who would be no comfort to me ; this surely is not a state to be preferred to death : and nobody can have truly enjoyed the advantages of youth, health, and spirits, who is content to exist without the two last, which alone bear any resemblance to the first.

<sup>6</sup> Lord Sandwich was parted from his wife, who was out of her senses. Walpole.

You see how difficult it is to conquer my proud spirit : low and weak as I am, I think my resolution and perseverance will get the better, and that I shall still be a gay shadow: at least, I will impose any severity upon myself, rather than humour the gout, and sink into that indulgence with which most people treat it. Bodily liberty is as dear to me as mental, and I would as soon flatter any other tyrant as the gout, my Whiggism extending as much to my health as to my principles, and being as willing to part with life, when I cannot preserve it, as your uncle Algernon when his freedom was at stake. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1039. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, July 30, 1765.

I DID not think of writing to you to-day, my dear Sir, both as I have very little to tell you, and as I am much fatigued with coming to town to-day from Strawberry Hill, where I have been these ten days, though with bad success, having had a severe return of my disorder, which I have as much superstitious aversion to name as the Romans had to pronounce the word Death. But let us talk of you, not me. Why, wherefore, or whence, the newspapers have taken it into their paper heads to recall you from Florence, I cannot tell. There never was a worse time for supposing so than when you are Mr. Conway's provincial. The instant I arrived and saw him, I named you first of all things. He stared, and had not even heard the report. However, I write, that an authentic contradiction may arrive at the same moment with the falsehood; and as I trust you have partiality enough to read my letter before the Chronicle (and indeed I have a title to such distinction, even as a senior gazette), the moment the paragraph perks up its ears, you may give it the lie, and I wish you could give it to the person that invented it. Whoever he is, he will not soon be resident at Florence.

The changes go on leisurely, as I told you they would ; and you must only believe in those who you see by the Gazette have kissed hands. The rest are like the removal of Sir Horace Mann ; reported by the ambitious themselves, coined by the enemy, or invented to amuse a public impatient of daily novelty. The new opposition is as abusive as it was clamorous, rather rigorous against abuse ; and having stabbed the liberty of the press in a thousand places, they now write libels upon every rag of its old clothes.

Lord Hertford's arrival brought me to town, though so little fit to be moved. He came for only a few days, to make his option between Ireland and Paris. He takes the former, not very gladly, but to accommodate his brother and his nephew Grafton. This is a great blow to my long-meditated French journey. At present I am not able to undertake it, nor shall be probably for some time ; yet go I think I must. Travelling is the best medicine to my shattered frame, and will be still more sovereign to my mind, that has been harassed and worn out with politics, and for which the successful event is by no means an adequate remedy. I built no castle in that prospect, nor like the soil a jot better than the view. My heart is set on retreat, and the decency of retiring so early charms me. I feel the sort of pleasure that I suppose Christian heroes (whose satisfaction in truth I do not quite comprehend) did formerly in abstaining from their virgin brides and embracing the life of hermits. Stay, I am not going to turn anchoret. Perhaps my recess from politics is more like a divorce ; it is to get rid of that scold the House of Commons.

Short as this letter is, consider it written by an invalid, and that I have even pain in my wrist while I am writing. I am carried to bed by two servants, and have not attempted to revive my walking these six days. Adieu !

P.S. Here is Mr. Chute, who does not neglect what you so much wish. He had a conference last week with your brother Ned, and they have sent another letter to Thistlethwaite. In short, nothing will be omitted that can be done or thought of.

1040. TO MISS ANNE PITT.

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 9, 1765.

THOUGH nobody can be more desirous of pleasing my Lady Bute than I am, because nobody has more regard and esteem for her, yet I must not, for the satisfaction of receiving her thanks, relinquish my chief merit, which was my zeal to obey your orders, Madam. But I will be as happy as you please, that my success has gratified so many persons for whom I have great honour and friendship. There are few points on which I can pretend to any interest ; fewer on which I care to try it, and perhaps fewer still on which I desire any. The solicitation for Mr. Erskine was so reasonable, that I believe I shall rest my credit there. I am, however, Madam, as sensible to Lady Bute's kind acceptance of my service as if I deserved it better, and beg you to thank her warmly for the honour she does me. Lord Hertford shall certainly see the letter and then I will return it to you.

I mend very slowly, because my chief complaint now being weakness, it is not easy for me to recover what I had so little of before, strength. The quiet I enjoy here, is not only the best, but my sole medicine. The relief I feel seems to come more from a cessation of politics than of the gout; and I believe if anybody could force me to take a place of business, I should immediately think that I felt a pain in my foot or my stomach; for while I live, I shall never be able to decompound the ideas of the two disorders, from which I underwent so much three weeks or a month ago. If you laugh at me, pray let it be here; I expect no soul on Sunday, and my gate shall be shut to chance customers. When one remembers an illness, one recollects too what did one good, and I can never forget, Madam, the charity and goodness you have had for me during my confinement. It has all the merit of good works, being bestowed on the most insignificant man alive, who has no desert but that of being yours.

1041. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 12, 1765.

MR. CONWAY, who came to dine with me here to-day with the Duke of Richmond, brought me your letter of the 27th of last month. I was a little disappointed to find you had not then received my history of the total change of administration in this country; much more vexed to hear that you have been suffering with the gout like me. I am, all the world will tell you, very ill-founded to preach on that text; but if I read lectures on chastity, and keep a whore, yet I am not a Methodist, and may therefore with propriety say, 'For God's sake don't act like a madman.' Dip your feet in cold water to prevent the gout! no, I never was quite so distracted. If it would prevent it, à la bonne heure; but all it can possibly do is to send it into your head or stomach, and you out of the world. The only thing I know of the gout is, that it is the only distemper in the world that insists upon curing itself. It is a monster and a mystery, and though I have felt so much of it lately, I have not even a guess at its nature left. I have fancied it wind or a conformation of the blood, or the Lord knows what;—in short, from minding not a word of what anybody said about it, I am now grown not to mind even my own opinion. I have tried hot medicines and cold, warmth and air, humouring it, and contradicting it; water, ice, wine, brandy, fruit; and have thought by turns that all of them did me good and did me hurt. I have had half a dozen returns, and sometimes been sick with Morello cherries, and sometimes with venison pasty. It is within two days of seven weeks that I have had this fit; it is but two days that I have been without pain, put on shoes, and crawled about the house; and at the end of all this torment, contrary to the doctrine of sages and nurses, I find my spirits and my stomach worse than they were a month ago; I don't mean my appetite, but the pain in my stomach, which by rule ought not to be there, my feet never having been free, and by another equally foolish rule, that the gout cures everything else; in short, I am very peevish, a mere shadow, and as old as a relic; still I don't dip my feet in cold water!

I immediately gave your letter to read to our Secretary of State. He says that Colonel Draper has the first promise of a red riband, and I remember well that Lord Clive's was torn from him. If I could not gainsay that, I lost all temper when he told me that Mitchel<sup>1</sup> was upon the ranks for another. I said that would be more cruel to you than any other competitor, Mitchel being in the same walk. In short, I made Mr. Conway vow his interest to you, and what little I have shall indubitably be employed for you. The impious shall come back again if this ministry does not serve you.

The impious will come back again, if assiduity and effrontery can effect it. Sandwich writes North Britons, that is, abusive libels, every day, and those gamblers call these ministers gamesters; but as the latter have not above a heel that is vulnerable, the former will hardly murder them by flinging mud. Yet pray don't think that I reckon their power immortal. Tant s'en faut. Norton is dismissed, and Mr. Yorke, as if he had any species of virginity left, has been hesitating above a fortnight, but has at last yielded to be Attorney-General again. Lord Hertford goes to Ireland, and the Duke of Richmond to Paris. These, I think, are all the last material changes. The Duke of Newcastle is busy in restoring clerks and tide-waiters, in offering everybody everything, and in patronizing the clergy again; not being yet cured by their behaviour<sup>2</sup>, of loving to make bishops.

I have had a letter from Mr. Churchill who has been at Nancy: could you believe that Princess Craon, who, by the way, went to Frankfort and Prague to see the election and coronation of the King of the Romans<sup>3</sup>, is stepped to Vienna to put the Emperor in mind of her nephew, whom she wishes to have promoted in the army! Mr. Chute and I have been computing her age, and find her to be complete ninety, for Prince Craon, in the year 1746, owned that she was then seventy-one. 'Tis surely very wholesome to be a sovereign's mistress<sup>4</sup>! My neighbour and friend, Lady Suffolk<sup>5</sup>, is little short of fourscore, and except her hearing, which she lost early in her reign, <sup>2</sup> The Duke of Newcastle had made nearly the whole bench of Bishops; yet, when he resigned the Treasury, there was but one of them that waited on him. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> The Archduke Joseph, eldest son of Francis I and Maria Theresa; succeeded his father in 1765 as Emperor, and his mother in 1780 as has all her senses as perfect as ever; is clean, genteel, upright; and has her eyes, teeth, and memory, in wonderful conservation, especially the last, which, unlike the aged, is as minutely retentive of what happened two years ago, as of the events of her youth.

King of Hungary; d. 1790.

<sup>4</sup> The Princess of Craon had been mistress to Leopold, Duke of Lorraine, father of the Emperor Francis. Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> Henrietta Hobart, Countess of Suffolk, mistress of George II. Walpole.

We believe past all doubt that the Pretender's eldest son is turned Protestant<sup>6</sup>, in earnest so; and in truth I think he could have no other reason now. What is more wonderful, and yet believed, is, that he came over and abjured in St. Martin's Church in London. Though he risked so much, what clergyman could suspect it was he? I asked if Johnson<sup>7</sup>, Bishop of Worcester, gave him absolution? He declares he will never marry, and his reason does him honour; that he may not leave England embroiled. What a strange conclusion of the House of Stuart, to end in a Protestant and a Cardinal! I am told that the latter, when the Duke of York was at Rome, said: 'To be sure, the real King of England's situation was preferable to his brother's, but that he could not help thinking himself upon a better foot than the Duke of York.' I heard a still better bon mot yesterday apropos to the eldest brother. The Dowager Duchess of Aiguillon wore his picture in a bracelet, with Jesus Christ for the reverse. People could not find a reason for the connection. Madame de Rochfort<sup>8</sup> said, 'Why, the same motto will suit both, "Mon royaume n'est pas de ce monde."' I pity the old phantom, if they have told him of his son's apostasy!

The Roman Church totters everywhere. The Benedictines at Paris have petitioned the Parliament for leave to lay aside their habit and rules, finding themselves ridiculous. The Cordeliers are ready to imitate them, but there is a little hitch; the Parliament asked shrewdly, what they proposed to do with their revenues, and I don't hear that they find them ridiculous; but the Parliament are not men to be stopped after they are invited. Monks suppressed at its own desire! what miracle next?

<sup>6</sup> Charles Edward visited London, and declared himself a Protestant, in 1750.

<sup>7</sup> Johnson, Bishop of Worcester, had been a Jacobite. Walpole.

<sup>8</sup> Perhaps Marie Elisabeth, daughter of Daniel Marie Anne de Talleyrand, and wife of the Comte de Rochefort. She afterwards married the Duc de Nivernais.

I did not know your Duke of Parma<sup>9</sup>, so I am only more sorry than I generally am for princes, as you tell me he was one of the best of the breed.

You received, I hope in time, my letter to contradict your recall. You must not believe a syllable you see in our papers. Their lies and blunders exceed of late even their usual ignorance. They have just bestowed a blue riband on Lord Hertford, who has had it so many years in the face of all London. Every red book, every list of Parliament, could have set them right: yet every paper has copied it. If such a tale appeared in a country gazette, one should not wonder—but to be printed in the capital!

I shall be impatient to hear that your gout is going like mine; and then I shall be impatient to make you a Knight of the Bath. At least you have a good solicitor, though I cannot whip to Vienna against a promotion, as if I were but ninety. Adieu!

1042. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Strawberry Hill, Aug. 23, 1765.

As I know that when you love people, you love them, I feel for the concern that the death of Lady Bab Montagu<sup>1</sup> will give you. Though you have long lived out of the way of seeing her, you are not a man to forget by absence, or all your friends would have still more reason to complain of your retirement. Your solitude prevents your filling up the places of those that are gone. In the world, new acquaintances slide into our habits, but you keep so strict a separation between your old friends and new faces, that the loss of any of the former must be more sensible to you than to most people. I heartily condole with you; and yet I must make you smile. The second Miss Jefferies was to go to a ball yesterday at Hampton Court with Lady Sophia Thomas's daughters. The news came, and your aunt Cosby said the girl must not go to it. The poor child then cried in earnest. Lady Sophia went to intercede for her, and found her grandmother at backgammon, who would hear no entreaties. Lady Sophia represented that Miss Jefferies was but a second cousin, and could not have been acquainted—'Oh, Madam, if there is no tenderness left in the world—cinq ace—Sir, you are to throw.'

<sup>9</sup> Philip of Bourbon, son of Philip V of Spain.

LETTER 1042. —<sup>1</sup> An unmarried daughter of first Earl of Halifax.

We have a strange story come from London. Lord Fortescue was dead suddenly; there was a great mob about his house in Grosvenor Square, and a buzz that my Lady<sup>2</sup> had thrown up the sash and cried murder, and that he then shot himself. How true all this I don't know; at least it is not so false as if it was in the newspapers. However, these sultry summers do not suit English heads: this last month puts even the month of November's nose out of joint for self-murders. If it was not for the Queen the peerage would be extinct: she has given us another Duke<sup>3</sup>.

My two months are up, and yet I recover my feet very slowly. I have crawled once round my garden, but it sent me to my couch for the rest of the day. This duration of vol. i. p. 182) he was 'stark staring mad,' and had attempted to kill his wife and children.

<sup>2</sup> Anne (d. 1812), daughter of John Campbell, of Cawdor; m. (1752) Matthew Fortescue, second Baron Fortescue. The report of his suicide was without foundation, but according to Lady Sarah Lennox (Life,

<sup>3</sup> Prince William Henry, afterwards Duke of Clarence and King as William IV.

weakness makes me very impatient, as I wish much to be at Paris before the fine season is quite gone. This will probably be the last time I shall travel to finish my education, and I should be glad to look once more at their gardens and villas: nay, churches and palaces are but uncomfortable sights in cold weather, and I have much more curiosity for their habitations than their company. They have scarce a man or a woman of note that one wants to see; and, for their authors, their style is grown so dull in imitation of us, they are si philosophes, si géomètres, si moraux, that I certainly should not cross the sea in search of ennui, that I can have in such perfection at home. However, the change of scene is my chief inducement, and to get out of politics. There is no going through another course of patriotism in your cousin Sandwich and George Grenville! I think of setting out by the middle of September; have I any chance of seeing you here before that? Won't you come and commission me to offer up your devotions at Notre-Dame de Livry? or 'chez nos filles de Sainte-Marie'? If I don't make haste, the reformation in France will demolish half that I want to see. I tremble for the Val de Grâce<sup>4</sup> and St. Cyr. The devil take Luther for putting it into the heads of his methodists to pull down churches! I believe in twenty years there will not be a convent left in Europe but this at Strawberry. I wished for you to-day; Mr. Chute and Cowslade dined here; the day was divine; the sun gleamed down into the chapel in all the glory of popery; the gallery was all radiance; we drank our coffee on the bench under the great ash; the verdure was delicious; our tea in the Holbein room, <sup>4</sup> The Abbey of Livry, dedicated to the Virgin, in the forest of Bondy, and the Convent of the 'Filles de la Visitation de Ste-Marie,' in the Faubourg St. Jacques, were favourite retreats of Madame de Sévigné.

<sup>5</sup> A Benedictine monastery originally founded in the valley of the Bièvre (Seine-et-Oise), and transferred to Paris in 1621.

by which a thousand chaises and barges passed; and I showed them my new cottage and garden over the way, which they had never seen, and with which they were enchanted. It is so retired, so modest, and yet so cheerful and trim, that I expect you to fall in love with it. I intend to bring it a handful of treillage and agréments from Paris, for being 'cross the road, and quite detached, it is to have nothing Gothic about it, nor pretend to call cousins with the mansion-house.

I know no more of the big world at London, than if I had not a relation in the ministry. To be free from pain and politics is such a relief to me, that I enjoy my little comforts and amusements here beyond expression. No mortal ever entered the gate of ambition with such transport as I took leave of them all at the threshold! Oh, if my Lord Temple knew what pleasures he could create for himself at Stowe, he would not harass a shattered carcass, and sigh to be insolent at St. James's! For my part, I say with the Bastard in King John, though with a little more reverence, and only as touching his ambition,

Oh, old Sir Robert, father, on my knee,
I give Heaven thanks I was not like to thee.

Adieu!

Yours most cordially,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1043. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Aug. 27, 1765.

I CAME to town last night, intending to lay your case more correctly before our Secretary of State<sup>1</sup>, but he did not arrive from the country himself till ten at night, and then found himself, by an absence of three days, so besieged with dispatches, which he sat reading during the whole supper and afterwards, that I could not slip in a paragraph. However, this morning reading that Sir Charles Howard was dead, I immediately wrote a note to Mr. Conway to advertise him of another riband vacant, and to put in a caveat (as he is going to dine at Claremont) against the Duke of Newcastle promising it to some head of a college at Cambridge; and to-night I shall fully unfold your pretensions; but as the post will be gone before Mr. Conway comes home, I write this to show you how good a solicitor you have. I am in the more hurry to decorate you, as I am going directly to Paris; yea, I set out on the 9th of next month: after that date, direct to me thither, addressed to Mr. Foley, my banker.

LETTER 1043.—<sup>1</sup> General Conway. Walpole.

Well! after twenty-three years of designs and irresolutions, I am actually leaving England! You will ask kindly whether almost every foreign thought in those years did not point beyond Paris? Oh, yes,—but, alas! think how ill I have been; not to mention that I am older too, by twenty-three years. That space has made Alps and Apennines grow twenty times taller and more wrinkled and horrid! Oh, but you will say, you may come by sea—worse and worse—a sea voyage after the gout in one's head and stomach! I will tell you what; there is a man who has just invented what he calls a marine belt; you buckle it on, and walk upon the sea as you would upon a grass-plot. I never was an excellent walker, and my feet at present are piteously tender,—but I think a wave cannot hurt one,—perhaps I may step to you from Marseilles to Leghorn. This discovery, to be sure, has given an ugly shock to one of our best miracles—but I give it up with Christian patience, being convinced that the art of flying will be next reduced to practice;—oh, I shall certainly make you a visit on the first pair of wings that are to be sold. However, I had rather have made it before your new Austrian court arrives: I have a mortal aversion to any detachment from Vienna.

There is nothing new here, except that the whole town is in an uncertainty whether my Lord —— is dead or alive, whether he has had a fit or a bullet; and yet he is but yonder in Grosvenor Square. The neighbourhood say my Lady called murder out of the window, and that immediately after, a pistol went off; the family now say that nothing at all happened, but a fit,—and yet he does not appear<sup>2</sup>. Thomas Graham, the apothecary, used on every occasion when you complained of any disorder, to reply with much solemnity, ‘Humph! it is very extraordinary, and yet it is very common.’ This curious phrase never happened to have common sense in it but on the subject of self-murder, which is very extraordinary and yet very common.

Adieu! Perhaps I shall write to you again before Monday se’nnight—certainly, if I can have a star to send in my letter. The next after that will be from Paris.

1044. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Saturday, Aug. 31, 1765, Strawberry Hill.

I THOUGHT it would happen so, that I should not see you before I left England! Indeed, I may as well give you quite up, for every year reduces our intercourse. I am prepared, because I know it must happen, if I live, to see my friends drop off—but my mind was not turned to see them entirely separated from me while they live. This is very uncomfortable—but so are many things!—well! I will go and try to forget you all—all! God knows the all that I have left to forget is small enough: but the warm heart, that gave me affections, is not so easily laid aside. If I could divest myself of that, I should not, I think, find much of friendship remaining. You, against whom I have no complaint, but that you satisfy yourself with loving me without any desire of seeing me, are one of the very last that I wish to preserve—but I will say no more on a subject that my heart is too full of.

<sup>2</sup> See p. 278.

I shall set out on Monday se'nnight, and force myself to believe that I am glad to go—and yet this will be my chief joy, for I promise myself little pleasure in arriving. Can you think me boy enough to be fond of a new world at my time of life? If I did not hate the world I know, I should not seek another. My greatest amusement will be in reviving old ideas. The memory of what made impressions on one's youth is ten times dearer than any new pleasure can be. I shall probably write to you often, for I am not disposed to communicate myself to anything that I have not known these thirty years. My mind is such a compound from the vast variety that I have seen, acted, pursued, that it would cost me too much pains to be intelligible to young persons, if I had a mind to open myself to them. They certainly do not desire I should. You like my gossiping to you, though you seldom gossip with me. The trifles that amuse my mind are the only points I value now. I have seen the vanity of everything serious, and the falsehood of everything that pretended to be serious. I go to see French plays and buy French china, not to know their ministers, to look into their government, or think of the interests of nations—in short, unlike most people that are growing old, I am convinced that nothing is charming but what appeared important in one's youth, which afterwards passes for follies. Oh, but those follies are sincere—if the pursuits of age are so, they are sincere alone to self-interest. Thus I think, and have no other care but not to think aloud. I would not have respectable youth think me an old fool. For the old knaves, they may suppose me one of their number if they please; I shall not be so—but neither the one nor the other shall know what I am. I have done with them all, shall amuse myself as well as I can, and think as little as I can; a pretty hard task for an active mind!

Direct your letters to Arlington Street, whence Favre will take care to convey them to me. I leave him to manage all my affairs, and take no soul but Louis. I am glad I don't know your Mrs. Ann; her partiality would make me love her, and it is entirely incompatible with my present system to leave even a postern-door open to any feeling, which would steal in if I did not double-bolt every avenue.

If you send me any parcel to Arlington Street before Monday se'nnight I will take great care of it. Many English books I conclude are to be bought at Paris—I am sure Richardson's works are, for they have stupefied the whole French nation: I will not answer for our best authors. You may send me your list, and, if I do not find them, I can send you word, and you may convey them to me by Favre's means, who will know of messengers, &c., coming to Paris.

I have fixed no precise time for my absence. My wish is to like it enough to stay till February, which may happen, if I can support the first launching into new society. I know four or five very agreeable and sensible people there, as the Guerschys, Madame de Mirepoix, Madame de Boufflers, and Lady Mary Chabot. These intimately, besides the Duc de Nivernois, and several others that have been here. Then the Richmonds will follow me in a fortnight or three weeks, and their house will be a sort of home. I actually go into it at first, till I can suit myself with an apartment; but I shall take care to quit it before they come, for though they are in a manner my children, I do not intend to adopt the rest of my countrymen, nor, when I quit the best company here, to live in the worst there; such are young travelling boys, and, what is still worse, old travelling boys, governors.

Adieu! remember you have defrauded me of this summer; I will be amply repaid the next; so make your arrangements accordingly.

Yours ever,

H. W.

1045. TO THE EARL OF STRAFFORD.

MY DEAR LORD,

Arlington Street, Sept. 3, 1765.

I cannot quit a country where I leave anything that I honour so much as your Lordship and Lady Strafford, without taking a sort of leave of you. I shall set out for Paris on Monday next the 9th, and shall be happy if I can execute any commission for you there.

A journey to Paris sounds youthful and healthy. I have certainly mended much this last week, though with no pretensions to a recovery of youth. Half the view of my journey is to re-establish my health—the other half to wash my hands of politics, which I have long determined to do whenever a change should happen. I would not abandon my friends while they were martyrs; but, now they have gained their crown of glory, they are well able to shift for themselves; and it was no part of my compact to go to that heaven, St. James's, with them. Unless I dislike Paris very much, I shall stay some time; but I make no declarations, lest I should be soon tired of it, and come back again. At first, I must like it, for Lady Mary Coke will be there, as if by assignation. The Countesses of Carlisle and Berkeley, too, I hear, will set up their staves there for some time; but as my heart is faithful to Lady Mary, they would not charm me if they were forty times more disposed to it.

The Emperor<sup>1</sup> is dead—but so are all the Maximilians and Leopolds his predecessors, and with no more influence on the present state of things. The Empress Dowager Queen will still be master—unless she marries an Irishman, as I wish with all my soul she may.

The Duke<sup>2</sup> and Duchess of Richmond will follow me in about a fortnight: Lord and Lady George Lennox go with them; and Sir Charles Bunbury and Lady Sarah are to be at Paris, too, for some time: so the English court there will be very juvenile and blooming. This set is rather younger than the dowagers with whom I pass so much of my summers and autumns; but this is to be my last sally into the world; and when I return, I intend to be as sober as my cat, and purr quietly in my own chimney corner.

Adieu, my dear Lord! May every happiness attend you both, and may I pass some agreeable days next summer with you at Wentworth Castle!

Your most devoted and faithful servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1046. TO LADY HERVEY.

Arlington Street, Sept. 3, 1765.

THE trouble your Ladyship has given yourself so immediately, makes me, as I always am, ashamed of putting you to any. There is no persuading you to oblige moderately. Do you know, Madam, that I shall tremble to deliver the letters you have been so good as to send me? If you have said half so much of me, as you are so partial as to think of me, I shall be undone. Limited as I know myself, and hampered in bad French, how shall I keep up to any character at all? Madame d'Aiguillon and Madame Geoffrin<sup>1</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Appointed ambassador to Paris.
Walpole.

LETTER 1046. — <sup>1</sup> Marie Thérèse

Geoffrin, née Rodet (1699-1777), widow of a rich manufacturer. She presided over a salon for many years.

will never believe that I am the true messenger, but will conclude that I have picked Mr. Walpole's portmanteau's pocket. I wish only to present myself to them as one devoted to your Ladyship; that character I am sure I can support in any language, and it is the one to which they would pay the most regard.—Well! I don't care, Madam—it is your reputation that is at stake more than mine: and, if they find me a simpleton that don't know how to express myself, it will all fall upon you at last. If your Ladyship will risk that, I will, if you please, thank you for a letter to Madame d'Egmont, too: I long to know your friends, though at the hazard of their knowing yours. Would I were a jolly old man, to match, at least, in that respect, your jolly old woman<sup>2</sup>!—But, alas! I am nothing but a poor worn-out rag, and fear, when I come to Paris, that I shall be forced to pretend that I have had the gout in my understanding. My spirits, such as they are, will not bear translating; and I don't know whether I shall not find it the wisest part I can take to fling myself into geometry, or commerce, or agriculture, which the French now esteem, don't understand, and think we do. They took George Selwyn for a poet, and a judge of planting and dancing: why may I not pass for a learned man and a philosopher? If the worst comes to the worst, I will admire Clarissa and Sir Charles Grandison; and declare I have not a friend in the world that is not like my Lord Edward Bomston<sup>3</sup>, though I never knew a character like it in my days, and hope I never shall; nor do I think Rousseau need to have gone so far out of his way to paint a disagreeable Englishman.

If you think, Madam, this sally is not very favourable to the country I am going to, recollect, that all I object to them is their quitting their own agreeable style, to take up the worst of ours. Heaven knows, we are unpleasing enough ! but, in the first place, they don't understand us ; and, in the next, if they did, so much the worse for them. What have they gained by leaving Molière, Boileau, Corneille, Racine, La Rochefoucault, Crébillon, Marivaux, Voltaire, &c. ? No nation can be another nation. We have been clumsily copying them for these hundred years, and are not we grown wonderfully like them ? Come, Madam, you like what I like of them ; I am going thither, and you have no aversion to going thither—but own the truth ; had not we both rather go thither fourscore years ago ? Had you rather be acquainted with the charming Madame Scarron, or the canting Madame de Maintenon ? with Louis XIV when the Montespan governed him, or when Père le Tellier ? I am very glad when folks go to heaven, though it is after another body's fashion ; but I wish to converse with them when they are themselves. I abominate a conqueror ; but I do not think he makes the world much compensation, by cutting the throats of his Protestant subjects to atone for the massacres caused by his ambition.

<sup>2</sup> The Duchesse d'Aiguillon. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> A character in the Nouvelle Héloïse.

The result of all this dissertation, Madam—for I don't know how to call it a letter—is, that I shall look for Paris in the midst of Paris, and shall think more of the French that have been than the French that are, except of a few of your friends and mine. Those I know, I admire and honour, and I am sure I will trust to your Ladyship's taste for the others ; and if they had no other merit, I can but like those that will talk to me of you. They will find more sentiment in me on that chapter, than they can miss parts ; and I flatter myself that the one will atone for the other.

I am, Madam, your Ladyship's

Most obliged and most obedient humble servant,

HRO. WALPOLE.

1047. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Sept. 5, 1765.

You cannot think how agreeable your letter was to me, and how luckily it was timed. I thought you in Cheshire, and did not know how to direct ; I now sit down to answer it instantly.

I have been extremely ill indeed with the gout all over, in head, stomach, both feet, both wrists, and both shoulders. I kept my bed a fortnight in the most sultry part of this summer, and for nine weeks could not say I was recovered. Though I am still weak and very soon tired with the least walk, I am in other respects quite well. However, to promote my entire re-establishment, I shall set out for Paris next Monday. Thus your letter came luckily. To hear you talk of going thither, too, made it most agreeable. Why should you not advance your journey? Why defer it till the winter is coming on? It would make me quite happy to visit churches and convents with you ; but they are not comfortable in cold weather. Do, I beseech you, follow me as soon as possible. The thought of your being there at the same time makes me much more pleased with my journey ; you will not, I hope, like it the less ; and, if our meeting there should tempt you to stay longer, it will make me still more happy.

If, in the meantime, I can be of any use to you, I shall be glad, either in taking a lodging for you, or anything else. Let me know, and direct to me in Arlington Street, whence my servant will convey it to me. Tell me above all things that you will set out sooner.

If I have any money left when I return, and can find a place for it, I shall be very glad to purchase the ebony cabinet you mention, and will make it a visit with you next summer if you please—but first let us go to Paris. I don't give up my passion for ebony; but, since the destruction of the Jesuits<sup>1</sup>, I hear one can pick up so many of their spoils, that I am impatient for the opportunity.

I must finish, as I have so much business before I set out; but I must repeat, how lucky the arrival of your letter was, how glad I was to hear of your intended journey, and how much I wish it may take place directly. I will only add that the court goes to Fontainebleau the last week in September, or first in October, and therefore it is the season in the world for seeing all Versailles quietly, and at one's ease. Adieu! dear Sir.

Yours most cordially,
HOR. WALPOLE.

1048. TO GROSVENOR BEDFORD.

DEAR SIR,

Strawberry Hill, Sept. 5, 1765.

I shall set out for Paris next Monday, but I could not go without taking a kind leave of you I would not tell you the day sooner, because I would not disturb you if you are in the country, or lame; and because, though I shall be in London for two days, I have so much to do, that you would hardly find me at home.

I have recovered very much in this last fortnight; and except when I get up, or attempt to take a walk, which very soon tires me, am now free from everything but weakness. Change of air and easy motion will, I don't doubt, soon quite restore me.

If you have any business with me, send a letter at any time to Arlington Street, and Favre, whom I leave behind, will convey it to me.

LETTER 1047. —<sup>1</sup> The Jesuits in France were suppressed by an edict of November 1764.

Adieu! dear Sir. I most heartily wish you health and happiness; and am ever yours,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1049. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

BIAU COUSIN,

Amiens, Wednesday, Sept. 11, 1765.

I have had a very prosperous journey till just at entering this city. I escaped a Prince of Nassau at Dover, and sickness at sea, though the voyage lasted seven hours and a half. I have recovered my strength surprisingly in the time; though almost famished for want of clean victuals and comfortable tea and bread and butter. Half a mile from hence I met a coach and four with an equipage of French, and a lady in pea-green and silver, a smart hat and feather, and two suivantes. My reason told me it was the Archbishop's concubine; but luckily my heart whispered that it was Lady Mary Coke. I jumped out of my chaise—yes, jumped, as Mrs. Nugent said of herself, fell on my knees, and said my first Ave Maria, gratiâ plena. We just shot a few politics flying—heard that Madame de Mirepoix had toasted me t'other day in tea—shook hands, forgot to weep, and parted; she to the Hereditary Princess, I to this inn, where is actually resident the Duchess of Douglas<sup>1</sup>. We are not likely to have an intercourse, or I would declare myself a Hamilton<sup>2</sup>.

I find this country wonderfully enriched since I saw it four-and-twenty years ago. Boulogne is grown quite a plump snug town, with a number of new houses. The worst villages are tight, and wooden shoes have disappeared. Mr. Pitt and the City of London may fancy what they will, but France will not come a-begging to the Mansion House this year or two. In truth, I impute this air of opulence a little to ourselves. The crumbs that fall from the chaises of the swarms of English that visit Paris must have contributed to fatten this province. It is plain I must have little to do when I turn my hand to calculating: but here is my observation. From Boulogne to Paris it will cost me near ten guineas; but then consider, I travel alone, and carry Louis most part of the way in the chaise with me. Nous autres milords anglois are not often so frugal. Your brother<sup>3</sup>, last year, had ninety-nine English to dinner on the King's birthday. How many of them do you think dropped so little as ten guineas on this road? In short, there are the seeds of a calculation for you; and if you will water them with a torrent of words, they will produce such a dissertation, that you will be able to vie with George Grenville next session in plans of national economy—only be sure not to tax travelling till I come back, loaded with purchases; nor, till then, propagate my ideas. It will be time enough for me to be thrifty of the nation's money, when I have spent all my own.

LETTER 1049.—<sup>1</sup> Margaret (d. 1774), daughter of James Douglas, of Mains; m. (1758) Archibald Douglas, first Duke of Douglas.

<sup>2</sup> The memorable cause between the houses of Douglas and Hamilton was then pending. Walpole.

Clermont, 12th.

While they are getting my dinner, I continue my journal. The Duchess of Douglas (for English are generally the most extraordinary persons that we meet with even out of England) left Amiens before me on her way home. You will not guess what she carries with her—oh! nothing that will hurt our manufactures; nor what George Grenville himself would seize. One of her servants died at Paris; she had him embalmed, and the body is tied before her chaise:—a droll way of being chief mourner.

For a French absurdity, I have observed that along the great roads they plant walnut-trees, but strip them up for firing. It is like the owl that bit off the feet of mice, that they might lie still and fatten.

<sup>3</sup> Francis, Earl of Hertford, then Ambassador at Paris. Walpole.

At the foot of this hill is an old-fashioned château belonging to the Duke of Fitz-James<sup>4</sup>, with a parc en quincunx and clipped hedges. We saw him walking in his waistcoat and riband, very well powdered; a figure like Guerchy. I cannot say his seat rivals Goodwood or Euston<sup>5</sup>. I shall lie at Chantilly to-night, for I did not set out till ten this morning—not because I could not, as you will suspect, get up sooner—but because all the horses in the country have attended the Queen to Nancy<sup>6</sup>. Besides, I have a little underplot of seeing Chantilly and St. Denis in my way; which you know one could not do in the dark to-night, nor in winter, if I return then.

Hôtel de feu Madame l'Ambassadrice d'Angleterre<sup>7</sup>,
Sept. 13, seven o'clock.

I am just arrived. My Lady Hertford is not at home, and Lady Anne<sup>8</sup> will not come out of her burrow: so I have just time to finish this before Madam returns; and Brian sets out to-night and will carry it. I find I shall have a great deal to say: formerly I observed nothing, and now remark everything minutely. I have already fallen in love with twenty things, and in hate with forty. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

<sup>4</sup> Charles (1712–1787), Duc de Fitz-james.

<sup>5</sup> The owners of these two seats were related to the Duc de Fitzjames.

<sup>6</sup> Stanislaus, King of Poland, father to the Queen of Louis XV, lived at Nancy. Walpole.

<sup>7</sup> Lord Hertford was at this time recalled, and the Duke of Richmond appointed to succeed him in the embassy at Paris. Walpole.

<sup>8</sup> Lady Anne Seymour Conway, afterwards married to the Earl of Drogheda. Walpole.

1050. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Sept. 14, 1765.

I AM but two days old here, Madam, and I doubt I wish I was really so, and had my life to begin, to live it here. You see how just I am, and ready to make amende honorable to your Ladyship. Yet I have seen very little. My Lady Hertford has cut me to pieces, and thrown me into a caldron with tailors, periwig-makers, snuff-box-wrights, milliners, &c., which really took up but little time; and I am come out quite new, with everything but youth. The journey recovered me with magic expedition. My strength, if mine could ever be called strength, is returned; and the gout going off in a minuet step. I will say nothing of my spirits, which are indecently juvenile, and not less improper for my age than for the country where I am; which, if you will give me leave to say it, has a thought too much gravity. I don't venture to laugh or talk nonsense, but in English.

Madame Geoffrin came to town but last night, and is not visible on Sundays; but I hope to deliver your Ladyship's letter and packet to-morrow. Mesdames d'Aiguillon, d'Egmont, and Chabot, and the Duc de Nivernois are all in the country. Madame de Boufflers is at l'Isle Adam, whither my Lady Hertford is gone to-night to sup, for the first time, being no longer chained down to the incivility of an ambassadress. She returns after supper; an irregularity that frightens me, who have not yet got rid of all my barbarisms. There is one, alas! I never shall get over—the dirt of this country: it is melancholy, after the purity of Strawberry! The narrowness of the streets, trees clipped to resemble brooms, and planted on pedestals of chalk, and a few other points, do not edify me. The French Opera, which I have heard to-night, disgusted me as much as ever; and the more for being followed by the Devin de Village<sup>1</sup>; which shows that they can sing without cracking the drum of one's ear. The scenes and dances are delightful: the Italian comedy charming. Then I am in love with treillage and fountains, and will prove it at Strawberry. Chantilly is so exactly what it was when I saw it above twenty years ago, that I recollected the very position of Monsieur le Duc's chair and the gallery. The latter gave me the first idea of mine; but, presumption apart, mine is a thousand times prettier. I gave my Lord Herbert's compliments to the statue of his friend the Constable<sup>2</sup>; and, waiting some time for the concierge, I called out 'Où est Vatel<sup>3</sup>?'

In short, Madam, being as tired as one can be of one's own country,—I don't say whether that is much or little,—I find myself wonderfully disposed to like this. Indeed I wish I could wash it. Madame de Guerchy is all goodness to me; but that is not new. I have already been prevented by great civilities from Madame de Bentheim and my old friend Madame de Mirepoix; but am not likely to see the latter much, who is grown a most particular favourite of the King, and seldom from him. The Dauphin is ill, and thought in a very bad way. I hope he will live, lest the theatres should be shut up. Your Ladyship knows I never trouble my head about royalties, farther than it affects my own interest. In truth, the way that princes affect my interest is not the common way.

I have not yet tapped the chapter of baubles, being desirous of making my revenues maintain me here as long as possible. It will be time enough to return to my Parliament when I want money.

Mr. Hume, that is the Mode, asked much about your Lady-ship. I have seen Madame de Monaco<sup>4</sup>, and think her very handsome, and extremely pleasing. The younger Madame d'Efmont, I hear, disputes the palm with her; and Madame de Brionne is not left without partisans. The nymphs of the theatres are laidés à faire peur, which at my age is a piece of luck, like going into a shop of curiosities, and finding nothing to tempt one to throw away one's money.

LETTER 1050. — <sup>1</sup> An opera by Rousseau.

<sup>2</sup> The Constable de Montmorency. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> The maître d'hôtel of the Prince de Condé. See letters of Madame de Sévigné to Madame de Grignan of April 24 and April 26, 1671.

There are several English here, whether I will or not. I certainly did not come for them, and shall connect with them as little as possible. The few I value I hope sometimes to hear of. Your Ladyship guesses how far that wish extends. Consider too, Madam, that one of my unworthinesses is washed and done away, by the confession I made in the beginning of my letter.

I am, Madam, your Ladyship's
Most faithful and most devoted humble servant,
HOR. WALPOLE.

1051. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Paris, Wednesday, Sept. 18, 1765.

I have this moment received your letter, and as a courier is just setting out, I had rather take the opportunity of writing to you a short letter, than defer it for a longer.

I had a very good passage, and pleasant journey, and find myself surprisingly recovered for the time. Thank you for the good news you tell me of your coming: it gives me great joy.

To the end of this week I shall be in Lord Hertford's house, so have not yet got a lodging: but when I do, you will easily find me. I have no banker, but credit on a merchant who is a private friend of Lord Hertford, consequently I cannot give you credit on him ; but you shall have the use of my credit, which will be the same thing, and we can settle our accounts together. I brought about a hundred pounds with me, as I would advise you to do. Guineas you may change into louis's or French crowns at Calais and Boulogne, and even small bank-bills will be taken here. In any shape I will assist you. Be careful on the road. My portmanteau, with part of my linen, was stolen from before my chaise at noon, while I went to see Chantilly. If you stir out of your room, lock the door of it in the inn, or leave your man in it.

<sup>4</sup> Catherine de Brignole (1787-1818), Princesse de Monaco. She afterwards (1798) married the Prince de Condé.

If you arrive near the time you propose, you will find me here, and I hope much longer.

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1052. TO THE COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK.

Paris, Sept. 20, 1765.

I OBEY your commands, Madam, though it is to talk of myself. The journey has been of great service to me, and my strength returned sensibly in two days. Nay, though all my hours are turned topsy-turvy, I find no inconvenience, but dine at half an hour after two, and sup at ten, as easily as I did in England at my usual hours. Indeed breakfast and dinner now and then jostle one another, but I have found an excellent preservative against sitting up late, which is by not playing at whisk. They constantly tap a rubber before supper, get up in the middle of a game, finish it after a meal of three courses and a dessert, add another rubber to it, then take their knotting-bags, draw together into a little circle, and start some topic of literature or irreligion, and chat till it is time to go to bed—that is, till you would think it time to get up again. The women are very good-humoured and easy ; most of the men disagreeable enough. However, as everything English is in fashion, our bad French is accepted into the bargain. Many of us are received everywhere ; Mr. Hume is fashion itself, although his French is almost as unintelligible as his English ; Mr. Stanley is extremely liked ; and, if liking them, good humour, and spirits can make anybody please, Mr. Elliot will not fail. For my own part, I receive the greatest civilities, and in general am much amused ; but I could wish there was less whisk, and somewhat more cleanliness. My Lady Brown<sup>1</sup> and I have diverted ourselves with the idea of Lady Blandford here ; I am convinced she would walk upon stilts for fear of coming near their floors, and that would rather be a droll sight.

The town is extremely empty at present, our manners having gained so much in that respect too, as to send them all into the country till winter. Their country houses would appear to me no more rural than those in Paris. Their gardens are like desserts, with no more verdure or shade. What trees they have are stripped up, and cut straight at top ; it is quite the massacre of the innocents. Their houses in town are all white and gold and looking-glass ; I never know one from another. Madame de Mirepoix's, though small, has the most variety and a little leaven of English.

You see, Madam, it will take some time to make me a perfect Frenchman. Upon the whole I am very well amused, which is all I seek besides my health. I am a little too old to be inquiring into their government or politics, not being come hither to finish my studies, but to forget them. One may always take one's choice here; old folks may be as young as they please, and the young as wise as they will. The former not only suits my age better, but my inclination, though the bon ton here is to be grave and learned.

LETTER 1052.—<sup>1</sup> Frances, daughter of William Sheldon, of Beoley, Worcestershire ; m. 1. Henry Fermor, of Tusmore, Oxfordshire ; 2. (as his third wife) Sir George Browne, third Baronet, of Kiddington, Oxfordshire, who died in 1754. Lady Browne was a neighbour and an occasional correspondent of Horace Walpole.

When Miss Hotham, to whom I beg my best compliments, is so good as to acknowledge the receipt of this, I must desire her to direct to her and your Ladyship's most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE,

thus:—

‘À Mons.

‘Mons. WALPOLE,

‘Recommandée à Mons. Foley,

‘Banquier,

‘à Paris.’

P.S. The most I ask of a letter is a particular account of your Ladyship's health.

1053. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, Sept. 22, 1765.

THE concern I felt at not seeing you before I left England might make me express myself warmly, but I assure you it was nothing but concern, nor was mixed with a grain of pouting. I knew some of your reasons, and guessed others. The latter grieve me heartily; but I advise you to do as I do: when I meet with ingratitude, I take a short leave both of it and its host. Formerly I used to look out for indemnification somewhere else; but having lived long enough to learn that the reparation generally proved a second evil of the same sort, I am content now to skin over such wounds with amusements, which at least leave no scars. It is true, amusements do not always amuse when we bid them. I find it so here ; nothing strikes me ; everything I do is indifferent to me. I like the people very well, and their way of life very well ; but as neither were my object, I should not much care if they were any other people, or it was any other way of life. I am out of England, and my purpose is answered.

Nothing can be more obliging than the reception I meet with everywhere. It may not be more sincere (and why should it?) than our cold and bare civility ; but it is better dressed, and looks natural ; one asks no more. I have begun to sup in French houses, and as Lady Hertford has left Paris to-day, shall increase my intimacies. There are swarms of English here, but most of them are going, to my great satisfaction. As the greatest part are very young, they can no more be entertaining to me than I to them, and it certainly was not my countrymen that I came to live with. Suppers please me extremely ; I love to rise and breakfast late, and to trifle away the day as I like. There are sights enough to answer that end, and shops you know are an endless field for me. The city appears much worse to me than I thought I remembered it. The French music as shocking as I knew it was. The French stage is fallen off, though in the only part I have seen Lequin<sup>1</sup> I admire him extremely. He is very ugly and ill made, and yet has an heroic dignity which Garrick wants, and great fire. The Dusmenil I have not seen yet, but shall in a day or two. It is a mortification that I cannot compare her with the Clairon, who has left the stage. Grandval<sup>2</sup> I saw through a whole play without suspecting it was he—alas ! four-and-twenty years make strange havoc with us mortals ! You cannot imagine how this struck me ! The Italian comedy,

LETTER 1058.—<sup>1</sup> Henri Louis Lekain (1728-1778), tragedian.

<sup>2</sup> François Charles Grandval (1710-1784).

now united with their opéra comique, is their most perfect diversion—but alas! Harlequin, my dear favourite Harlequin, my passion, makes me more melancholy than cheerful. Instead of laughing, I sit silently reflecting how everything loses charms when one's own youth does not lend it gilding! When we are divested of that eagerness and illusion with which our youth presents objects to us, we are but the caput mortuum of pleasure.

Grave as these ideas are, they do not unfit me for French company. The present tone is serious enough in conscience. Unluckily, the subjects of their conversation are duller to me than my own thoughts, which may be tinged with melancholy reflections, but I doubt from my constitution will never be insipid. The French affect philosophy, literature, and freethinking—the first never did, and never will possess me; of the two others I have long been tired. Freethinking is for one's self, surely not for society; besides, one has settled one's way of thinking, or knows it cannot be settled; and for others I do not see why there is not as much bigotry in attempting conversions from any religion as to it. I dined to-day with a dozen savants, and though all the servants were waiting, the conversation was much more unrestrained, even on the Old Testament, than I would suffer at my own table in England, if a single footman was present. For literature, it is very amusing when one has nothing else to do. I think it rather pedantic in society; tiresome when displayed professedly—and, besides, in this country one is sure it is only the fashion of the day. Their taste in it is worst of all: could one believe that when they read our authors, Richardson and Mr. Hume should be their favourites? The latter is treated here with perfect veneration. His History, so falsified in many points, so partial in as many, so very unequal in its parts, is thought the standard of writing.

In their dress and equipages they are grown very simple. We English are living upon their old gods and goddesses; I roll about in a chariot decorated with Cupids, and look like the grandfather of Adonis.

Of their parliaments and clergy I hear a good deal, and attend very little: I cannot take up any history in the middle, and was too sick of politics at home to enter into them here. In short, I have done with the world, and only live in it, rather than in a desert, like you. Few men can bear absolute retirement, and we English worst of all. We grow so humoursome, so obstinate and capricious, and so prejudiced, that it requires a fund of good nature like yours not to grow morose. Company keeps our rind from growing too coarse and rough; and though at my return I design not to mix in public, I do not intend to be quite a recluse. My absence will put it in my power to take up or drop as much as I please.

Adieu! I shall inquire about your commission of books; but having been arrived but ten days, have not yet had time. Need I say? no, I need not, that nobody can be more affectionately yours than

H. W.

Chez Monsieur Foley, Banquier, à Paris.

1054. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Sept. 26, 1765.

No poor mortal was ever so glad to return to his own country, as I was to quit mine. It is true this is pretty much the sum total of my satisfaction. I am very well received here; like much some that I knew before I arrived, and some I am acquainted with since; have sights to see, and baubles to buy, two considerable occupations of my life; but I am not young enough to be enchanted with anything new: still less of an age to form friendships, when one has proved how rarely the thing exists at all. But I am unchained from politics, and have no longer anybody's follies to answer for, or care for, but my own.

I did not receive your last till I came hither, and it was then too late, when your new Grand Duke was on the road, to mention to Mr. Conway what you hint at, an increase of character. In truth, my object for you is always of a more solid nature; I had rather your appointments were increased than your dignity. At present, too, a new solicitation might interfere with the riband, which I think would cast more lustre on you than a step of office. My interest is not great enough to obtain all I should wish for you, if it can obtain anything; and I doubt, the measure of leaving what are called all my friends will not add to my credit. It must have been you, and almost only you, for whom I would have asked anything. The fewer obligations I have, the less right has anybody to tax my attendance. I want to dissolve most of my connections, not to increase them, and to break off with a world, of which I am heartily tired as to anything serious.

Lady Hertford is gone, and the Duke of Richmond not come; consequently I am as isolé as I can wish to be. There are three or four houses whither I go when I will, but you may believe that it is not constant. Their histories are unknown to me, and uninteresting; their politics most indifferent; their fashionable literature, and more fashionable irreligion, subjects of which I am tired. I neither love to dispute nor discuss. In short, nothing interests me but a few points on which I do not care to think, much less to talk with indifferent persons. I am Methuselem on most things, and a boy on others, and one don't love to tell people that one's passions are too superannuated or too juvenile; that one is past caring for what they like, and still too attached to some sentiments of one's own. When the monde returns to Paris, I shall probably be more dissipated, but I am not discontented with my present nonchalance.

Prince Beauvau<sup>1</sup> is at Bordeaux, and is likely to stay some time. I saw his daughter the other night at Madame de Mirepoix's, who is like what he was, but it is not delicate enough for a girl. Here is a Dr. Gatti, a disciple of Cocchi, who speaks of you with great regard, and desired me to mention him. I was pleased the other night at the Italian comedy to find I had lost so little of my Italian as to understand it better than the French scenes.

Though the fashionable turn is serious, yet it is still fashion that rules. The Count de St. Florentin<sup>2</sup>, Secretary of State, has had his hand cut off on the bursting of his gun: they had talked of it two days and were tired. Somebody asked how he did? 'Bon!' replied one of the company, 'on n'en parle plus.' He was not out of danger, but it was an old story.

The Dauphin is in a very bad way, and not likely to live. Of English history I know not a syllable. I conclude there is nothing to know. The shooting season is begun, and we have our fashions too. I suppose of politics on ne parle plus. I expect some tapage from the residence of the Prince and Princess of Brunswick at St. James's. Her Royal Highness is of a lively imagination, and he did not leave England in a style that promised sudden cordiality.

They question me much here, why Mr. Pitt did not accept LETTER 1054.—<sup>1</sup> Son of the Prince de Craon. His only child by his first wife married the Prince de Poix, son of the Comte de Noailles. His second wife was a widow, Madame de Clermont, sister of the Comte de Chabot, by whom he had no children. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> Louis Phélypeaux (1705-1777), Comte de St. Florentin, son of the Marquis de la Vrillière; cr. Duc de la Vrillière in 1770. He became Minister for Foreign Affairs on the disgrace of Choiseul (1771). His abuse of lettres de cachet was flagrant, and made him the object of such universal hatred that he was dismissed shortly after the accession of Louis XVI.

the administration? Truly it would be difficult for me to explain to them what I do not understand myself! Monsieur de Temple is still more inexplicable. I do not give myself much trouble to inform them; and I hear with great tranquillity que c'étoit un très bon homme que ce Milord Bath<sup>3</sup>. However, I could not conceive that they knew so very little of a country which has lately been so much in vogue with them. A very sensible woman<sup>4</sup> knew more of the matter, when she said to me last night, 'Vous avez eu un moment bien brillant, mais vous êtes tombé!' Yes, in good truth.

Write to me, addressed to Monsieur Foley, banquier, à Paris, and tell me of your new court<sup>5</sup>. I hope you, like me and the vulgar, expect marvels at first from a young sovereign.—I remember, and laugh at, myself.

Adieu! This is a dull letter enough. I know no events, and you will not expect me to write Travels, like Misson<sup>6</sup>, or to fall in love, like Polnitz<sup>7</sup>, with all the princes and princesses of the earth. My spirits would serve if they found proper food, but I believe they will lie pretty fallow for the rest of my life. When one has a singular turn of mind, and not liant with a new world, one grows unintelligible but to the few cotemporaries that rest about one. My mind has taken in its quantum of feelings. I shall live upon the old stock; and, I doubt, be very insipid both to myself and others. Adieu!

Sept. 30th.

P.S. Sir James Macdonald<sup>8</sup> is going from hence to Florence, and has desired me to give him a recommenda-

<sup>3</sup> Lord Bath, at the end of his life, had been at Paris. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> The celebrated Madame Geoffrin. Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> The Archduke Leopold, brother of the Emperor Joseph II, was Great Duke of Tuscany, and married a Princess of Spain. Walpole.

<sup>6</sup> François Maximilien Misson (d.

1722), a Protestant, who resided in England after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He wrote a Nouveau Voyage d'Italie.

<sup>7</sup> Baron Polnitz wrote accounts of several European courts. Walpole.

<sup>8</sup> Sir James Macdonald, eighth Baronet, of Slate in the Isle of Skye; d. unmarried at Rome in 1766.

tion to you. He is a particular friend of Lord Beauchamp<sup>9</sup>, and a very extraordinary young man for variety of learning. He is rather too wise for his age, and too fond of showing it, but when he has seen more of the world, he will choose to know less.

Lord Beauchamp passed through here to-day, and stopped for only four hours. He spoke of you in raptures.

1055. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Oct. 3, 1765.

STILL I have seen neither Madame d'Egmont nor the Duchess d'Aiguillon, who are in the country; but the latter comes to Paris to-morrow. Madame Chabot I called on last night. She was not at home, but the Hôtel de Carnavalet<sup>1</sup> was; and I stopped on purpose to say an Ave Maria before it. It is a very singular building, not at all in the French style, and looks like an ex voto raised to her honour by some of her foreign votaries. I don't think her honoured half enough in her own country. I shall burn a little incense before your Cardinal's heart<sup>2</sup>, Madam, à votre intention.

I have been with Madame Geoffrin several times, and think she has one of the best understandings I ever met, and more knowledge of the world. I may be charmed with the French, but your Ladyship must not expect that they will fall in love with me. Without affecting to lower myself, the disadvantage of speaking a language worse than any idiot one meets, is insurmountable: the silliest Frenchman is eloquent to me, and leaves me embarrassed and obscure. I could name twenty other reasons, if this one

<sup>9</sup> Francis Seymour Conway, eldest son of the Earl of Hertford. Walpole.

LETTER 1055.—<sup>1</sup> Madame de Sé-

vigné's residence in Paris. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> The Cardinal de Richelieu's heart at the Sorbonne. Walpole.

was not sufficient. As it is, my own defects are the sole cause of my not liking Paris entirely: the constraint I am under from not being perfectly master of their language, and from being so much in the dark, as one necessarily must be, on half the subjects of their conversation, prevents my enjoying that ease for which their society is calculated. I am much amused, but not comfortable.

The Duc de Nivernois is extremely good to me; he inquired much after your Ladyship. So does Colonel Drumgold. The latter complains; but both of them, especially the Duc, seem better than when in England. I meet the Duchesse de Cossé this evening at Madame Geoffrin's. She is pretty, with a great resemblance to her father; lively and good-humoured, not genteel.

Yesterday I went through all my presentations at Versailles. 'Tis very convenient to gobble up a whole royal family in an hour's time, instead of being sacrificed one week at Leicester House, another in Grosvenor Street, a third in Cavendish Square, &c., &c., &c. La Reine is le plus grand roi du monde, and talked much to me, and would have said more if I would have let her; but I was awkward, and shrunk back into the crowd. None of the rest spoke to me. The King is still much handsomer than his pictures, and has great sweetness in his countenance, instead of that farouche look which they give him. The Mesdames are not beauties, and yet have something Bourbon in their faces. The Dauphiness I approve the least of all: with nothing good-humoured in her countenance, she has a look and accent that made me dread lest I should be invited to a private party at loo with her<sup>3</sup>. The poor Dauphin is ghastly, and perishing before one's eyes.

Fortune bestowed on me a much more curious sight than a set of princes; the wild beast of the Gevaudan, which is killed, and actually in the Queen's antechamber. It is a thought less than a leviathan and the Beast in the Revelations, and has not half so many wings and eyes and talons as I believe they have, or will have some time or other; this being possessed but of two eyes, four feet, and no wings at all. It is as like a wolf as a commissary in the late war, except, notwithstanding all the stories, that it has not devoured near so many persons. In short, Madam, now it is dead and come, a wolf it certainly was, and not more above the common size than Mrs. Cavendish is. It has left a dowager and four young princes.

<sup>3</sup> A reference to the Princess Amelia.

Mr. Stanley, who I hope will trouble himself with this, has been most exceedingly kind and obliging to me. I wish that, instead of my being so much in your Ladyship's debt, you were a little in mine, and then I would beg you to thank him for me. Well, but as it is, why should not you, Madam? He will be charmed to be so paid, and you will not dislike to please him. In short, I would fain have him know my gratitude; and it is hearing it in the most agreeable way, if expressed by your Ladyship.

I am, Madam,

Your most obliged and obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1056. TO JOHN CHUTE.

Paris, Oct. 3, 1765.

I DON'T know where you are, nor when I am likely to hear of you. I write at random, and, as I talk, the first thing that comes into my pen.

I am, as you certainly conclude, much more amused than pleased. At a certain time of life, sights and new objects may entertain one, but new people cannot find any place in one's affection. New faces with some name or other belonging to them catch my attention for a minute—I cannot say many preserve it. Five or six of the women that I have seen already are very sensible. The men are in general much inferior, and not even agreeable. They sent us their best, I believe, at first, the Duc de Nivernois. Their authors, who by the way are everywhere, are worse than their own writings, which I don't mean as a compliment to either. In general, the style of conversation is solemn, pedantic, and seldom animated, but by a dispute. I was expressing my aversion to disputes: Mr. Hume, who very gratefully admires the tone of Paris, having never known any other tone, said with great surprise, 'Why, what do you like, if you hate both disputes and whisk?'

What strikes me the most upon the whole is, the total difference of manners between them and us, from the greatest object to the least. There is not the smallest similitude in the twenty-four hours. It is obvious in every trifle. Servants carry their lady's train, and put her into her coach with their hat on. They walk about the streets in the rain with umbrellas to avoid putting on their hats; driving themselves in open chaises in the country without hats, in the rain too, and yet often wear them in a chariot in Paris when it does not rain. The very footmen are powdered from the break of day, and yet wait behind their master, as I saw the Duc of Praslin's do, with a red pocket-handkerchief about their necks. Versailles, like everything else, is a mixture of parade and poverty, and in every instance exhibits something most dissonant from our manners. In the colonnades, upon the staircases, nay, in the antechambers of the royal family, there are people selling all sorts of wares. While we were waiting in the Dauphin's sumptuous bedchamber, till his dressing-room door should be opened, two fellows were sweeping it, and dancing about in sabots to rub the floor.

You perceive that I have been presented. The Queen took great notice of me; none of the rest said a syllable. You are let into the King's bedchamber just as he has put on his shirt; he dresses and talks good-humouredly to a few, glares at strangers, goes to mass, to dinner, and a-hunting. The good old Queen, who is like Lady Primrose<sup>1</sup> in the face, and Queen Caroline in the immensity of her cap, is at her dressing-table, attended by two or three old ladies, who are languishing to be in Abraham's bosom, as the only man's bosom to whom they can hope for admittance. Thence you go to the Dauphin, for all is done in an hour. He scarce stays a minute; indeed, poor creature, he is a ghost, and cannot possibly last three months. The Dauphiness is in her bedchamber, but dressed and standing; looks cross, is not civil, and has the true Westphalian grace and accents. The four Mesdames, who are clumsy plump old wenches, with a bad likeness to their father, stand in a bedchamber in a row, with black cloaks and knotting-bags, looking good-humoured, not knowing what to say, and wriggling as if they wanted to make water. This ceremony too is very short; then you are carried to the Dauphin's three boys, who you may be sure only bow and stare. The Duke of Berry looks weak and weak-eyed: the Count de Provence is a fine boy; the Count d'Artois<sup>2</sup> well enough. The whole concludes with seeing the Dauphin's little girl<sup>3</sup> dine, who is as round and as fat as a pudding.

In the Queen's antechamber we foreigners and the foreign ministers were shown the famous beast of the Gevaudan, LETTER 1056.—<sup>1</sup> Anne (d. 1775), daughter of Peter Drelincourt, Dean of Armagh; m. (1740) Hugh Primrose, third Viscount Primrose, who died in 1741.

<sup>2</sup> Louis Auguste, Duc de Berry; Louis Stanislaus Xavier, Comte de Provence; Charles Philippe, Comte d'Artois; all of whom reigned, as Louis XVI, Louis XVIII, and Charles X respectively.

<sup>3</sup> Marie Adélaïde Clotilde Xavière (d. 1802); m. (1775) Charles Emmanuel, Prince of Piedmont, afterwards King of Sardinia.

just arrived, and covered with a cloth, which two chasseurs lifted up. It is an absolute wolf, but uncommonly large, and the expression of agony and fierceness remains strongly imprinted on its dead jaws.

I dined at the Duc of Praslin's with four-and-twenty ambassadors and envoys, who never go but on Tuesdays to court. He does the honours sadly, and I believe nothing else well, looking important and empty. The Duc de Choiseul's face, which is quite the reverse of gravity, does not promise much more. His wife<sup>4</sup> is gentle, pretty, and very agreeable. The Duchess of Praslin, jolly, red-faced, looking very vulgar, and being very attentive and civil. I saw the Duc de Richelieu in waiting, who is pale, except his nose, which is red, much wrinkled, and exactly a remnant of that age which produced General Churchill, Wilks the player<sup>5</sup>, the Duke of Argyll, &c. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1057. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, Oct. 6, 1765.

I AM glad to find you grow just, and that you do conceive at last, that I could do better than stay in England for politics. 'Tenez, mon enfant,' as the Duchesse de la Ferté<sup>1</sup> said to Madame Staal<sup>2</sup>; 'comme il n'y a que moi au monde qui aie toujours raison,' I will be very reasonable; and as you have made this concession to me, who knew I was in the right, I will not expect you to answer all my reasonable letters. If you send a bullying letter to the King of

<sup>4</sup> Louise Honorine Crozat du Châtel, Duchesse de Choiseul; d. 1801.

<sup>5</sup> Robert Wilks (d. 1782).

LETTER 1057.—<sup>1</sup> Probably Madeleine d'Angennes (d. 1714), Duchesse de la Ferté.

<sup>2</sup> Marguerite Jeanne Cordier de Launay (1684-1750), Baronne de Staal, Lady in Waiting of the Duchesse du Maine, and authoress of Memoirs, first published in 1755.

Spain<sup>3</sup>, or to Chose, my neighbour here<sup>4</sup>, I will consider them as written to myself, and subtract so much from your bill. Nay, I will accept a line from Lady Ailesbury now and then in part of payment. I shall continue to write as the wind sets in my pen; and do own my babble does not demand much reply.

For so reasonable a person as I am, I have changed my mind very often about this country. The first five days I was in violent spirits; then came a dismal cloud of whisk and literature, and I could not bear it. At present I begin, very Englishly indeed, to establish a right to my own way. I laugh, and talk nonsense, and make them hear me. There are two or three houses where I go quite at my ease, am never asked to touch a card, nor hold dissertations. Nay, I don't pay homage to their authors. Every woman has one or two planted in her house, and God knows how they water them. The old Président Hénault is the pagod at Madame du Deffand's<sup>5</sup>, an old blind débauchée of wit,

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Conway was now Secretary of State for the Foreign Department. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> The King of France, Louis XV. Walpole. — Negotiations were still pending with the Spanish and French courts concerning the payment of the Manilla ransom and the Canada bills, and the destruction of the fortifications of Dunkirk.

<sup>5</sup> Marie de Vichy Chamrond (1697–1780), Marquise du Deffand; she had been blind since 1752. Her appartement was in the Convent of St. Joseph in the Rue St. Dominique, where for thirty years she received the literary and aristocratic celebrities of her own and other nations. In spite of the somewhat slighting tone of Walpole's remarks in this letter, he soon became Madame du Deffand's almost daily visitor while in Paris, and one of her warmest admirers. She repaid him by a devotion which has been well described as a 'tendresse exaltée . . . dont le vrai nom échappe, tant celui d'amitié serait faible et celui d'amour dérisoire.' Walpole's regard for her, which was sincere and constant, was tempered by the fear that her excessive affection might make him ridiculous in the eyes of his friends. His subsequent visits to Paris were undertaken on her account. The correspondence between them, which began on his departure from Paris in 1766, lasted till the death of Madame du Deffand. Her letters to Horace Walpole were first published by Miss Berry in 1810. His letters to her, a number of which were returned to him during Madame du Deffand's lifetime, were largely used by Miss Berry in her notes. The original letters, with the exception of seven which are included in this edition, have been destroyed. (See Athenaeum, July 13, 1901.)

where I supped last night. The Président is very near deaf, and much nearer superannuated. He sits by the table: the mistress of the house, who formerly was his, inquires after every dish on the table, is told who has eaten of which, and then bawls the bill of fare of every individual into the Président's ears. In short, every mouthful is proclaimed, and so is every blunder I make against grammar. Some that I make on purpose, succeed; and one of them is to be reported to the Queen to-day by Hénault, who is her great favourite. I had been at Versailles; and having been much taken notice of by her Majesty, I said, alluding to Madame Sévigné, 'La Reine est le plus grand roi du monde.' You may judge if I am in possession by a scene that passed after supper. Sir James Macdonald<sup>6</sup> had been mimicking Hume: I told the women (who, besides the mistress, were the Duchess de la Valière<sup>7</sup>, Madame de Forcalquier, and a demoiselle), that to be sure they would be glad to have a specimen of Mr. Pitt's manner of speaking; and that nobody mimicked him so well as Elliot<sup>8</sup>. They firmly believed it, teased him for an hour, and at last said he was the rudest man in the world not to oblige them. It appeared the more strange, because here everybody sings, reads their own works in public, or attempts any one thing without hesitation or capacity. Elliot speaks miserable French; which added to the diversion.

I had had my share of distress in the morning, by going through the operation of being presented to the royal family, down to the little Madame's pap-dinner, and had behaved as sillily as you will easily believe; hiding myself behind every mortal. The Queen called me up to her dressing-table, and seemed mightily disposed to gossip with me ; but instead of enjoying my glory like Madame de Sévigné, I slunk back into the crowd after a few questions. She told Monsieur de Guerchy<sup>9</sup> of it afterwards, and that I had run away from her, but said she would have her revenge at Fontainebleau. So I must go thither, which I did not intend. The King, Dauphin, Dauphiness, Mesdames, and the wild beast did not say a word to me. Yes, the wild beast, he of the Gevaudan. He is killed, and actually in the Queen's antichambre, where he was exhibited to us with as much parade as if it was Mr. Pitt. It is an exceedingly large wolf, and, the connoisseurs say, has twelve teeth more than any wolf ever had since the days of Romulus's wet-nurse. The critics deny it to be the true beast ; and I find most people think the beast's name is legion, for there are many. He was covered with a sheet, which two chasseurs lifted up for the foreign ministers and strangers. I dined at the Duke of Praslin's with five-and-twenty tomes of the corps diplomatique ; and after dinner was presented, by Monsieur de Guerchy, to the Duc de Choiseul. The Duc de Praslin is as like his own letters in D'Éon's book as he can stare ; that is, I believe, a very silly fellow. His wisdom is of the grave kind. His cousin, the first minister, is a little volatile being, whose countenance and manner had nothing to frighten me for my country. I saw him but for three seconds, which is as much as he allows to any one body or thing. Monsieur de Guerchy, whose goodness to me is inexpressible, took the trouble of walking everywhere with me, and carried me particularly to see the new office for state papers. I wish I could send it you. It is a large building, disposed like an hospital, with the most admirable order and method.

<sup>6</sup> An elder brother of Sir A. Macdonald, the present Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer. He died at Rome the year following, leaving behind him a distinguished character for every mental accomplishment. Walpole.

<sup>7</sup> Anne Julie Françoise de Crussol (d. 1798), daughter of the Duc d'Uzès; m. (1742) Louis César de la Baume le Blanc, Duc de la Valière.

<sup>8</sup> Sir Gilbert Elliot, of Minto. Walpole.

<sup>9</sup> He had been Ambassador in England. Walpole.

Lodgings for every officer; his name and business written over his door. In the body is a perspective of seven or eight large chambers: each is painted with emblems, and wainscoted with presses with wired doors and crimson curtains. Over each press, in golden letters, the country to which the pieces relate, as Angleterre, Allemagne, &c. Each room has a large funnel of bronze with or moulu, like a column, to air the papers and preserve them. In short, it is as magnificent as useful.

From thence I went to see the reservoir of pictures at M. de Marigny's<sup>10</sup>. They are what are not disposed of in the palaces, though sometimes changed with others. This refuse, which fills many rooms from top to bottom, is composed of the most glorious works of Raphael, L. da Vinci, Giorgione, Titian, Guido, Correggio, &c. Many pictures, which I knew by their prints, without an idea where they existed, I found there.

The Duc de Nivernois is extremely obliging to me. I have supped at Madame de Bentheim's, who has a very fine house, and a woful husband. She is much livelier than any Frenchwoman. The liveliest man I have seen is the Duc de Duras<sup>11</sup>: he is shorter and plumper than Lord Halifax, but very like him in the face. I am to sup with the Dussons on Sunday. In short, all that have been in England are exceedingly disposed to repay any civilities they received there. Monsieur de Caraman wrote from the country to excuse his not coming to see me, as his wife is on the point of being brought to bed, but begged I would come to them. So I would, if I was a man-midwife: but though they are easy on such heads, I am not used to it, and cannot make a party of pleasure of a labour.

<sup>10</sup> Abel François Poisson (1727-1781), Marquis de Marigny; he was the brother of Madame de Pompadour, and was Directeur Général des

Bâtiments Royaux.

<sup>11</sup> Emmanuel Félicité (1715-1789), Duc de Duras.

Wilkes arrived here two days ago, and announced that he was going minister to Constantinople. To-day I hear he has lowered his credentials, and talks of going to England, if he can make his peace<sup>12</sup>. I thought by the manner in which this was mentioned to me, that the person meant to sound me: but I made no answer; for, having given up politics in England, I certainly did not come to transact them here. He has not been to make me the first visit, which, as the last arrived, depends on him: so, never having spoken to him in my life, I have no call to seek him. I avoid all politics so much, that I had not heard one word here about Spain. I suppose my silence passes for very artful mystery, and puzzles the ministers, who keep spies on the most insignificant foreigner. It would have been lucky if I had been as watchful. At Chantilly I lost my portmanteau with half my linen; and the night before last I was robbed of a new frock, waistcoat and breeches, laced with gold; a white and silver waistcoat, black velvet breeches, a knife, and a book. These are expenses I did not expect, and by no means entering into my system of extravagance.

I am very sorry for the death of Lord Ophaly, and for his family. I knew the poor young man himself but little, but he seemed extremely good-natured. What the Duke of Richmond will do for a hôtel, I cannot conceive. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1058. TO MISS ANNE PITT.

Paris, Oct. 8, 1765.

BEFORE I came to Paris, I flattered myself that you had some regard for me, and would not be sorry to see me in England again. Was addressing me to Madame de Rochefort the way to make me return? Do not pretend to plead two or three most obliging letters to her in my favour: one has read of ancient politicians, I forget when and where they lived, who used to give letters of credit upon a neighbouring prince to those they wished to destroy, with a postscript recommending the bearer to a halter. Modern policy is better bred, and when it wants to get rid of one, sends one to Circe or Madame de Rochefort. What signifies whether one is hanged or enchanted, if one never has it in one's power to return home? Your friend, Madam, tells me you have long promised her a visit; but you was too wise to make it, and I alone am the bubble. In truth she exercises her power, this enchantress does, in a manner very different from Mesdames the witches her predecessors, for she turns all her subjects into reasonable creatures and makes them fit to converse even with her. At a little supper t'other night in her apartment at the Luxembourg, there was but one of us that had four feet. He was in the shape of an Angola cat, but as gentle, sensible, and agreeable as his mistress; you yourself, Madam, cat-hater as you are, would have stroked him. He is the Duc de Nivernois' particular friend, who has his picture on his snuff-box, and between them they have lately written some fables, which I am to see, and which I am told exhibit such a knowledge of the quadruped kind, that most people think the philosopher Rhominagrobis<sup>1</sup> must have had the chief paw in them.

<sup>12</sup> After his outlawry. Walpole.

LETTER 1058.—Not in C.; now printed from Hist. MSS. Comm., 18th

Report, Appendix, Part III, vol. i. p. 146.

The quarrel I have with you, Madam, for having introduced me to such pleasing company has extinguished the memory of a lesser injury. I fell in love at Chantilli with a corbeille and determined at my return to be the founder of corbeilles in England. The first thing I heard on my arrival at Paris was that the model of one was already gone to Mrs. Pitt. I was enraged—but if I am never to return how does this affect me? Madame de Rochefort says you have sent her a list of twenty questions about depth, quantity of earth . . . I know the whole, but will not give you a tittle of information. Should I ever escape from the magic circle in which you have placed me, what pleasure it will be to find a preposterous corbeille at Pitsburg<sup>2</sup>. Strawberry Hill shall give itself airs, and ridicule your barbarous attempts. They ask me a thousand questions about Pitsburg; I tell them it is a vile guinguette, that has nothing but verdure, and prospect, and a parcel of wild trees that have never been cut into any shape, and as awkward as if they had been transplanted out of Paradise: that you fancy you are making something of the house, but that you have been too long out of France not to have lost all taste: that you will not have so much as an antechamber full of cooks, chafing-dishes, and footmen in dirty nightcaps.

<sup>1</sup> Raminagrobis or Rominagrobis, name of a cat in La Fontaine's Fables (bk. vii. 16; bk. xii. 5).

The Duc de Nivernois appears in much better health than when he left England. Though he is very good to me I have seen much less of him than I wish, for France is so changed that they pass near five months in the country. It is true a pastoral life appears a strange thing without green fields. I cannot yet divest myself of my northern prejudices, nor reconcile myself to landscapes built of stone and chalk.

Madame de Mirepoix, as I told her, is the most constant of women, for I found her with a cat in her lap, drinking tea, and as obliging to me as formerly. It is a little inconvenient that she is so great a favourite with the King, which leaves her but few moments to bestow on Paris. Her talents and her favour are so acknowledged, that most people think she might be Prime Minister and a Cardinal, if she pleased; and yet she is so moderate, and inattentive to making her fortune, that she every now and then gives it a wicked blow at pharaoh. Whisk has stepped in a little to save her, for you know, Madam, it takes a long time to ruin oneself by odd tricks. Her house is extremely pretty: her little cabinet and library charming. Madame de Bentheim has a very fine house opposite to the Cours de la Reine. I was a little unlucky; it was a fine moonlight thrown over the garden, river, and terraces. She ordered me to admire the view; I rubbed my eyes and those of my almanac, for I protest to you, on seeing nothing but white, I thought it was December and a scene of frost and snow.

<sup>2</sup> Horace Walpole's name for Miss Pitt's country house at Kensington Gravel Pits.

The court is gone to Fontainebleau, whither they say I must follow it; must I? I don't love courts. Nay, I saw this toother day in its highest point of glory; the wild beast of the Gevaudan is killed, and actually in the Queen's antechamber at Versailles, where it was exhibited to the foreign ministers and nous autres étrangers. It is a very large wolf to be sure, and they say has twelve teeth more than any of the species, and six less than the Czarina. The Duc de Richelieu, whose lamp is to go out in a ballet, has ordered nine operas for Fontainebleau, but I am not one of the beasts which their music would ever draw after it. To tell you the truth, Madam, if I was a maker of nations, I think I could make an agreeable one out of France and England; but I do not quite like either as they are. I shall not pick and choose the materials till I have seen a little more of this country: the plan I invite you to adjust with me some fine evening at Pittsburg, for thither I will return if there is a talisman left on this side of the Persian tales to break Madame de Rochefort's enchantments. Oh, she is an artful sorceress, and appears so gentle and natural. There is no particular beauty and youth to frighten one and put one upon one's guard. She appears the most rational humane being upon earth, and then when one comes downstairs, there is a straw or something laid at the threshold of the Luxembourg, and one cannot stir a foot over it.

I have received since I came hither a letter from Lady Frances Erskine so full of thanks, that I was going, Madam, to send it to you, who I am sure have much better right to them. Pray tell her how much I was ashamed to receive what I deserved so little; and that I hope she has received my acknowledgements of her letter, though I could [not] have so little conscience as to accept the thanks.

Let me see, Madam, it is the beginning of October; planting is not begun; the paper-man has disappointed you, the corbeille was wrong and must be made over again; my Lady Bute is but little in town, my Lady Cardigan is at Blackheath, the balls for the Prince and Princess of Brunswick are taking breath, Mesdames de Seillern and Masserano are at home but twice a week, you don't live much at my Lady Harrington's and the evenings are very long; yes, you have full time to write me a very long letter; and having no news is no excuse, for you see what a volume one can pen without having a tittle to say. Why, there is no more in my letter than if my Lord Sandwich had written it, and signed it Anti-Sejanus<sup>3</sup>. On the contrary I pique myself on writing as many words without under Sandwich's influence by James Scott, a clergyman.

<sup>3</sup> A series of letters signed 'Anti-Sejanus' appeared at this time in the daily papers. They were written

meaning, as if I hoped for the favour of the City of London ; and I do more than their best authors can, fill whole pages without having recourse to Billingsgate. Won't you reward such merit? Whether you do or not I shall still be yours.

Postscript. I have seen a Madame de St. Prie<sup>4</sup>, wife of the Intendant of—don't you know where? She inquired extremely about you, having known you in the south of France.

1059. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Oct. 13, 1765.

How are the mighty fallen ! Yes, yes, Madam, I am as like the Duc de Richelieu as two peas ; but then they are two old withered grey peas. Do you remember the fable of Cupid and Death, and what a piece of work they made with hustling their arrows together ? This is just my case : Love might shoot at me, but it was with a gouty arrow. I have had a relapse in both feet, and kept my bed six days : but the fit seems to be going off ; my heart can already go alone, and my feet promise themselves the mighty luxury of a cloth shoe in two or three days. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay<sup>1</sup>, who are here, and are, alas ! to carry this, have been of great comfort to me, and have brought their delightful little daughter, who is as quick as Ariel. Mr. Ramsay could want no assistance from me : what do we both exist upon here, Madam, but your bounty and charity ? When did you ever leave one of your friends in want of another ? Madame Geoffrin came and sat two hours last night by my bedside : I could have sworn it had been my Lady Hervey, she was so good to me. It was with so much sense, information, instruction, and correction! The manner of the latter charms me. I never saw anybody in my days that catches one's faults and vanities and impositions so quick, that explains them to one so clearly, and convinces one so easily. I never liked to be set right before! You cannot imagine how I taste it! I make her both my confessor and director, and begin to think I shall be a reasonable creature at last, which I had never intended to be. The next time I see her, I believe I shall say, 'Oh! Common Sense, sit down: I have been thinking so and so; is not it absurd?'—for t'other sense and wisdom, I never liked them; I shall now hate them for her sake. If it was worth her while, I assure your Ladyship she might govern me like a child.

<sup>4</sup> Probably the Comtesse de St. Priest.

LETTER 1059.—<sup>1</sup> Allan Ramsay the painter. Walpole.

The Duc de Nivernois too is astonishingly good to me. In short, Madam, I am going downhill, but the sun sets pleasingly. Your two other friends have been in Paris; but I was confined and could not wait on them. I passed a whole evening with Lady Mary Chabot most agreeably: she charged me over and over with a thousand compliments to your Ladyship. For sights, alas! and pilgrimages, they have been cut short! I had destined the fine days of October to excursions; but you know, Madam, what it is to reckon without one's host, the gout. It makes such a coward of me, that I shall be afraid almost of entering a church. I have lost, too, the Dumenil in Phèdre and Mérope, two of her principal parts, but I hope not irrecoverably.

Thank you, Madam, for the Taliacotian extract: it diverted me much. It is true, in general I neither see nor desire to see our wretched political trash: I am sick of it up to the fountain-head. It was my principal motive for coming hither; and had long been my determination, the first moment I should be at liberty, to abandon it all. I have acted from no views of interest ; I have shown I did not ; I have not disgraced myself—and I must be free. My comfort is, that, if I am blamed, it will be by all parties. A little peace of mind for the rest of my days is all I ask, to balance the gout.

I have writ to Madame de Guerchy about your orange-flower water ; and I sent your Ladyship two little French pieces that I hope you received. The uncomfortable posture in which I write will excuse my saying any more ; but it is no excuse against my trying to do anything to please one who always forgets pain when her friends are in question.

Your Ladyship's faithful humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1060. TO LADY MARY COKE.

Paris, Oct. 15, 1765.

As, to be sure, Lady Mary, you have read the works of every Horace that ever writ, you may remember that one of us has said something like this :

Coelum, non podagram mutant, qui trans mare currunt.

The verse, as I quote it, is a little lame, but you must consider it has got the gout ; so, alas ! have I ! Is it not moving to be cut off in the bud of one's curiosity, and at the entrance of a new career, that promised so bright a campaign ? For I must confess all my infidelities. You are accustomed to hear and pardon them. In two days I fell in love three times ; and the Lord knows how large the building of my seraglio must have been, if this wicked gout had not stepped in between me and the digging of the foundations. I do not let it proceed, lest it should be taken for an hospital, especially as one or two of my passions approach nearer to the age of invalids than to that of sultanas. The affront to your sovereign charms, I own, is aggravated by my going to fish into the last age for subjects of inconstancy; but what signifies it? I always return to you; and at last you will have no competitor left but the gout, who is si aimable!

LETTER 1060.—Not in C. ; reprinted from Letters and Journals of Lady Mary Coke, vol. iii. pp. xvi-xvii.

Your Ladyship, who only glanced at Paris, saw more of it than I have. However, before I was confined, I had the fortune to be treated with the sight of what, next to Mr. Pitt, has occasioned most alarm in France, the beast of the Gevaudan. It was in the Queen's antechamber at Versailles when I was presented to her. It has left an Andromache and four little princes. The savage dowager wanted Monsieur D'Alembert to educate her cubs, but having refused the Czarina, he could not decently undertake the charge, though there were more hopes of unteaching them their bloodthirstiness than he could entertain of the Russian progeny.

The court is at Fontainebleau; and the residence there, which was to have been shortened, is now to continue to the 18th of November, the change of air and ass's milk agreeing so well with the Dauphin, that they begin to have hopes of him. This leaves Paris a desert—but what is a desert more or less to a man lying on a couch? Indeed, I have company enough from morning to night, who have the charity to visit me. The Duc de Nivernois is inexpressibly good, and has scarce missed a day. He says he called often at your door, and regrets not having seen you. Lady Mary Chabot, Madame Geoffrin, Madame de Juliac, the old Président Hénault, and twenty others have been by my bedside; in short, though I am only related to Mr. Pitt by the gout, I find they have great respect for me.

Here are but few English now, but there is one of the most amiable I ever knew, Lord Ossory<sup>1</sup>, whom I see often. He has a great deal of the engaging manner of his cousin Tavistock<sup>2</sup>, is modest, manly, very sensible and well bred. Of your islanders and your politics, thank God! I know nothing at all; and I am almost afraid of asking any questions, lest I betray my ignorance—but is it true, as they say here, that Lord Temple is made Governor of the King's children, that Lord Sandwich is turned Methodist, and that Mr. Ellis has been taken up for writing treasonable papers? I don't know how to believe these things, though I have seen many as strange. Perhaps they only tell me so to amuse my confinement. My gracious Lady's pen will make any news acceptable to me. I hope it is not the contrary to her that I have retained my place in our box<sup>3</sup>. What use I shall make of it, the Lord knows. If I knew of any remedy for the gout, even in Japan, I should be tempted to go thither—if there is none, one's own fireside is the properest place—but how or when am I to get even thither? My little feet could not bear yet a giant's slipper. When you see Lady Suffolk, mention me to her with the respect and gratitude I feel; and when you write to Wentworth Castle, Madam, don't forget my strong attachments there. Any good account of Lady Strafford's health will always be most welcome to me. Not doubting your charity to a poor invalid, I beg your Ladyship to send your letter to Mr. Conway's office, recommandée à Monsr. Foley, Banquier. My letter, I perceive, is scarcely legible, my paper, ink, and pens are abominable, and my posture worse, but zeal, you see, Madam, can write, though leaning on its arm.

<sup>1</sup> John Fitzpatrick (1745–1818), second Earl of Upper Ossory. In 1769 he married Anne Liddell, the divorced wife of the third Duke of Grafton.

<sup>2</sup> The Duchess of Bedford and Lord Ossory's mother were sisters.

<sup>3</sup> In the Opera House burnt down in 1789. According to Doran the box was No. 3 on the ground tier, and was shared by Lord Hertford, Lady Strafford, General Conway and his wife, Lady Mary Coke, and Horace Walpole.

I am your Ladyship's,

though inconstant, yet unalterable,

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1061. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, Oct. 16, 1765.

I AM here, in this supposed metropolis of pleasure, trist enough; hearing from nobody in England, and again confined with the gout in both feet. Yes, I caught cold, and it has returned; but as I begin to be a little acquainted with the nature of its caresses, I think the violence of its passion this time will be wasted within the fortnight. Indeed, a stick and a great shoe do not commonly compose the dress which the English come hither to learn—but I shall content myself if I can limp about enough to amuse my eyes—my ears have already had their fill, and are not at all edified. My confinement preserves me from the journey to Fontainebleau, to which I had no great appetite; but then I lose the opportunity of seeing Versailles and St. Cloud at my leisure.

I wrote to you soon after my arrival; did you receive it? All the English books you named to me are to be had here at the following prices. Shakespeare in eight volumes unbound for twenty-one livres; in larger paper for twenty-seven. Congreve in three volumes for nine livres. Swift in twelve volumes for twenty-four livres; another edition for twenty-seven. So you see I do not forget your commissions. If you have farther orders, let me know.

Wilkes is here, and has been twice to see me in my illness. He was very civil, but I cannot say entertained me much. I saw no wit: his conversation shows how little he has lived in good company, and the chief turn of it is the grossest bawdy. He has certainly one merit, notwithstanding the bitterness of his pen, that is, he has no rancour—not even against Sandwich, of whom he talked with the utmost temper. He showed me some of his notes on Churchill's works, but they contain little more than one note on each poem to explain the subject of it.

The Dumenil is still the Dumenil, and nothing but curiosity could make me want the Clairon. Grandval is grown so fat and old, that I saw him through a whole play and did not guess him. Not one other, that you remember on the stage, remains there.

It is not a season for novelty in any way, as both the court and the world are out of town. The few that I know are almost all dispersed. The old Président Heynault made me a visit yesterday: he is extremely amiable, but has the appearance of a superannuated bacchanal—superannuated, poor soul! indeed he is! The Duc de Richelieu is a lean old resemblance of old General Churchill, and like him affects still to have his Boothbies. Alas! poor Boothbies!

I hope, by the time I am convalescent, to have the Richmonds here. One of the miseries of chronical illnesses is, that you are a prey to every fool, who, not knowing what to do with himself, brings his ennui to you, and calls it charity.

Tell me a little the intended dates of your motions, that I may know where to write at you. Commend me kindly to Mr. John, and wish me a good night, of which I have had but one these ten days.

Yours ever,

H. W.

1062. TO THE COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK.

Paris, Oct. 16, 1765.

THOUGH I begin my letter to-day, Madam, it may not be finished and set out these four days ; but serving a tyrant who does not allow me many holiday-minutes, I am forced to seize the first that offer. Even now when I am writing upon the table, he is giving me malicious pinches under it.

I was exceedingly obliged to Miss Hotham for the favour of her letter, though it did not give me so good an account of your Ladyship as I wished. I will not advise you to come to Paris, where, I assure you, one has not a nip less of the gout than at London, and where it is rather more difficult to keep one's chamber pure, water not being reckoned here one of the elements of cleanliness. If ever my Lady Blandford and I make a match, I shall insist on her coming hither for a month first, to learn patience. I need have a great stock, who have only travelled from one sick bed to another ; who have seen nothing ; and who hear of nothing but the braveries of Fontainebleau, where the Duc de Richelieu, whose year it is, has ordered seven new operas, besides other shows. However, if I cannot be diverted, my ruin at least is protracted, as I cannot go to a single shop.

Lady Mary Chabot has been so good as to make me a visit. She is again gone into the country till November, but charged me over and over to say a great deal for her to your Ladyship, for whom she expresses the highest regard.

Lady Brown is still in the country too, but as she loves laughing more than is fashionable here, I expect her return with great impatience. As I neither desire to change their religion or government, I am rather tired of their perpetual dissertations on those subjects.

As when I was here last, which, alas ! is four-and-twenty years ago, I was much at Mrs. Hayes's, I thought it but civil to wait on her now that her situation is a little less brilliant. She was not at home, but invited me to supper next night. The moment she saw me I thought I had done very right not to neglect her, for she overwhelmed me with professions of her fondness for me and all my family. When the first torrent was over, she asked me if I was son of the Horace Walpole that had been Ambassador here? I said no, he was my uncle.—Oh ! then you are he I used to call my Neddy !—No, Madam, I believe that is my brother.—Your brother ! what is my Lord Walpole ?—My cousin, Madam.—Your cousin ! why, then, who are you ? I found that if I had omitted my visit, her memory of me could not have reproached me much.

Lord and Lady Fife<sup>1</sup> are expected here every day from Spa ; but we hear nothing certain yet of their Graces of Richmond, for whom I am a little impatient, and for Pam too, who I hope comes with them. In French houses it is impossible to meet with anything but whisk, which I am determined never to learn again. I sit by and yawn ; which, however, is better than sitting at it to yawn.

I hope to be able to take the air in a few days ; for though I have had very sharp pain and terrible nights, this codicil to my gout promises to be of much shorter duration than what I had in England, and has kept entirely to my feet. My diet sounds like an English farmer's, being nothing but beef and pudding—in truth the beef is bowilli, and the pudding bread. This last night has been the first in which I have got a wink of sleep before six in the morning—but skeletons can live very well without eating or sleeping—nay, they can laugh too, when they meet with a jolly mortal of this world.

LETTER 1062.—<sup>1</sup> James Duff (1729–1809), second Earl Fife, and (apparently) his mother, Jean Grant (d. 1788), Countess Fife.

Mr. Chetwynd, I conclude, is dancing at country balls and horse-races. It is charming to be so young; but I don't envy one whose youth is so good-humoured and good-natured. When he gallops post to town, or swims his horse through a mill-pond in November, pray make my compliments to him, and to Lady Blandford and Lady Denbigh. The joys of the gout do not put one's old friends out of one's head, even at this distance.

I am your Ladyship's

Most obedient

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1063. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Oct. 16, 1765.

I AM stocked with your letters, my dear Sir, and have nothing to say in answer. Two packets have been sent back to me from England, dated before a third, that I received here and answered. I am impatient to know that you have got it, for the Chevalier de Lorenzi<sup>1</sup> has put it into my head, though in truth his own is none of the clearest, that it should have been franked to Genoa, there being a rupture somewhere between postmasters of different territories. I shall take care to be better informed before this departs.

If you have received mine, as I hope, you will have seen that I had left England before I knew of your schemes, and consequently when it was too late to assist them. If the deposit of solicitation for you that I left before I set out has no weight, my word from hence will certainly have none, where they do not like I should be; nor truly can I with much grace ask favours when I will grant none. You have been an exception, because I neither know how to refuse you, or to resist attempting to serve you; but having burst from all political connections, my wish is, not to be drawn back by any ties. If there is any regard left for me, you will be served, because nothing could be more strongly pressed on my side. I shall be sorry, but shall not wonder, if I am forgotten.

LETTER 1063.—<sup>1</sup> Brother of Comte Lorenzi, the French Minister at Florence. Walpole.

Your new court will, I hope, amuse you, and not ruin you. A friend, as it is called, but, as I think, the worst of foes, has stepped in to save me from ruin here. In short, I caught cold ten days after my arrival, have had a relapse, and am laid up with the gout in both feet. It is vexatious enough, besides the pain, which is no flea-bite. It prevents my seeing both things and people, except in my own room, which is seldom the place where I wish to see them. Basta! This world was made for Cæsar! that is, the healthy and the bustling. Unpleasant as it is to be ill anywhere but at home, the rooted aversion I have taken to politics and the House of Commons will brave even the gout, which shall not carry me back. When I do return, which at soonest I think will be in February, I shall still wear the gout's livery, and live retired from all other connections. What little I learn here, when the scene opens, shall be transmitted to you, but I have made few arrangements of curiosity.

Adieu! my dear Sir. The life of a bedchamber in a hôtel garni, and in a foreign country, and when the court is at Fontainebleau, can furnish little matter for a letter. The Dauphin is said to mend with the change of air and ass's milk, and the journey, which was to have been shortened, is again protracted to the 18th of next month.

1064. TO THOMAS BRAND.

Paris, Oct. 19, 1765.

DON'T think I have forgot your commissions : I mentioned them to old Mariette<sup>1</sup> this evening, who says he has got one of them, but never could meet with the other, and that it will be impossible for me to find either at Paris. You know, I suppose, that he would as soon part with an eye as with anything in his own collection.

You may, if you please, suppose me extremely diverted here. Oh, exceedingly. In the first place, I have seen nothing ; in the second, I have been confined this fortnight with a return of the gout in both feet ; and in the third, I have not laughed since my Lady Hertford went away. I assure you, you may come hither very safely, and be in no danger from mirth. Laughing is as much out of fashion as pantins or bilboquets. Good folks, they have no time to laugh. There is God and the King to be pulled down first ; and men and women, one and all, are devoutly employed in the demolition. They think me quite profane, for having any belief left. But this is not my only crime : I have told them, and am undone by it, that they have taken from us to admire the two dullest things we had, whisk and Richardson—it is very true, and they want nothing but George Grenville to make their conversations, or rather dissertations, the most tiresome upon earth. For Lord Lyttelton, if he would come hither, and turn freethinker once more, he would be reckoned the most agreeable man in France—next to Mr. Hume, who is the only thing in the world that they believe implicitly ; which they must do, for I defy them to understand any language that he speaks.

LETTER 1064.—<sup>1</sup> Pierre Jean Mariette (1694–1774), a collector of engravings.

If I could divest myself of my wicked and unphilosophic bent to laughing, I should do very well. They are very civil and obliging to me, and several of the women are very agreeable, and some of the men. The Duc de Nivernois has been beyond measure kind to me, and scarce missed a day without coming to see me during my confinement. The Guerchys are, as usual, all friendship. I had given entirely into supping, as I do not love rising early, and still less meat breakfasts. The misfortune is that in several houses they dine, and in others sup.

You will think it odd that I should want to laugh, when Wilkes, Sterne, and Foote are here; but the first does not make me laugh, the second never could, and for the third, I choose to pay five shillings when I have a mind he should divert me. Besides, I certainly did not come in search of English: and yet the man I have liked the best in Paris is an Englishman, Lord Ossory, who is one of the most sensible young men I ever saw, with a great deal of Lord Tavistock in his manner.

The joys of Fontainebleau I miss by my illness—Pazienza! If the gout deprived me of nothing better than a court!

The papers say the Duke of Dorset is dead: what has he done for Lord George<sup>2</sup>? You cannot be so unconscionable as not to answer me. I don't ask who is to have his riband; nor how many bushels of fruit the Duke of Newcastle's dessert for the Hereditary Prince contained, nor how often he kissed him for the sake of 'the dear house of Brunswick.'—No, keep your politics to yourselves; I want to know none of them:—when I do, and authentically, I will write to my Lady — or Charles Townshend.

Mrs. Pitt's friend, Madame de Rochefort, is one of my principal attachments, and very agreeable indeed. Madame de Mirepoix another. For my admiration, Madame de

<sup>2</sup> His son, Lord George Sackville.

Monaco—but I believe you don't doubt my Lord Hertford's taste in sensualities. March's passion, the Maréchale d'Estrées<sup>3</sup>, is affected, cross, and not at all handsome. The princes of the blood are pretty much retired, do not go to Portsmouth and Salisbury once a week, nor furnish every other paragraph to the newspapers. Their campaigns are confined to killing boars and stags, two or three hundred in a year. Adieu! Mr. Foley is my banker; or it is still more sure if you send your letter to Mr. Conway's office.

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1065. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, Oct. 28, 1765.

MR. HUME<sup>1</sup> sends me word from Fontainebleau, that your brother, some time in the spring of 1764, transmitted to the English ministry 'a pretty exact and very authentic account of the French finances'; these are his words: and 'that it will be easily found among his Lordship's dispatches of that period.' To the other question I have received no answer: I suppose he has not yet been able to inform himself.

This goes by an English coachman of Count Lauragais, sent over to buy more horses; therefore I shall write a little ministerially, and, perhaps, surprise you, if you are not already apprised of things in the light I see them.

The Dauphin will probably hold out very few days. His death, that is, the near prospect of it, fills the philosophers with the greatest joy, as it was feared he would endeavour the restoration of the Jesuits. You will think the sentiments of the philosophers very odd state news—but do you know who the philosophers are, or what the term means here? In the first place, it comprehends almost everybody; and in the next, means men who, avowing war against popery, aim, many of them, at a subversion of all religion, and still many more, at the destruction of regal power. How do you know this? you will say; you, who have been but six weeks in France, three of which you have been confined to your chamber? True: but in the first period I went everywhere, and heard nothing else; in the latter, I have been extremely visited, and have had long and explicit conversations with many, who think as I tell you, and with a few of the other side, who are no less persuaded that there are such intentions. In particular, I had two officers here t'other night, neither of them young, whom I had difficulty to keep from a serious quarrel, and who, in the heat of the dispute, informed me of much more than I could have learnt with great pains.

<sup>3</sup> Adélaïde Félicité Brulart, daughter of the Marquis de Sillery; m. (1744), as his second wife, Louis Charles César le Tellier, Maréchal d'Estrées.

LETTER 1065.—<sup>1</sup> The celebrated David Hume was Secretary of Embassy to the Earl of Hertford during his residence at Paris. Walpole.

As a proof that my ideas are not quite visions, I send you a most curious paper<sup>2</sup>; such as I believe no magistrate would have pronounced in the time of Charles I. I should not like to have it known to come from me, nor any part of the intelligence I send you: with regard to which, if you think it necessary to communicate it to particular persons, I desire my name may be suppressed. I tell it you for your satisfaction and information, but would not have anybody else think that I do anything here but amuse myself: my amusements indeed are triste enough, and consist wholly in trying to get well; but my recovery moves very slowly. I have not yet had anything but cloth shoes on, live sometimes a whole day on warm water, and am never tolerably well till twelve or one o'clock.

<sup>2</sup> This paper does not appear. Walpole.

I have had another letter from Sir Horace Mann, who has much at heart his riband and increase of character. Consequently you know, as I love him so much, I must have them at heart too. Count Lorenzi is recalled, because here they think it necessary to send a Frenchman of higher rank to the new grand ducal court. I wish Sir Horace could be raised on this occasion. For his riband, his promise is so old and so positive that it is quite a hardship.

Pray put the colonies in good humour: I see they are violently disposed to the new administration. I have not time to say more, nor more to say if I had time; so good night! Let me know if you receive this, and how soon: it goes the day after to-morrow. Various reports say the Duke of Richmond comes this week. I sent you a letter by Monsieur de Guerchy. Dussion, I hear, goes ambassador to Poland. Tell Lady Ailesbury that I have five or six little parcels, though not above one for her, of laces and ribands, which Lady Cecilia left with me; but how to convey them the Lord knows.

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1066. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Nov. 2, 1765.

You cannot be more distressed than I am at your not receiving my letters. This is the third I have written since I came hither. The first of them was dated on the 30th of September. Then the Chevalier de Lorenzi told me there was some dispute between the French and Italian postmasters, and offered to convey one for me to his brother. I gave him one on the 19th of October, and had no doubt but you would receive that. I now scarce know what to do, unless Mr. Foley will engage to find some safer way. It embarrasses me the more, while I fear the miscarriage of my letters, I can scarce even give you hints of what I do not care to explain at all by writing. Had you received my others, I think you would have understood me. The sum of what I have said in them, and all I can say in this, is, that, but to serve you, nothing could have made me solicit at all, and you are much deceived if you think my interest worth a farthing. I pressed the affair of your riband with all the vehemence I could before I left England; I have renewed my application since I came hither; and even three days ago, on receiving your last letter but one, I wrote in behalf of an increase of character for you. I own it was not pleasant to do, nor do I flatter myself that any regard will be paid to my suit. In short, I have left what are called my friends, have done with them, have refused to return to their Parliament—can I reasonably ask or expect favours from them?

I had long determined before the change happened, for very good reasons, to withdraw from party and politics the moment I should find an opportunity. Chance and my friends gave it me; I seized it; and though I was their slave while they were out of place, I will not be so now they are in, nor will be ordered to come and go just as they want me. Think then, my dear Sir, on what interest you build when you call on mine! And do allow me some merit when you are the single exception to the resolution I had taken of asking no more favours of this administration<sup>1</sup> than I did of the last. I think I shall LETTER 1066.—<sup>1</sup> Mr. Walpole had a good opinion of Lord Rockingham as an honest man, but thought him very unfit for First Minister; and, therefore, as he paid no court to him, had not much hopes of the red riband for Sir Horace Mann, which could not be obtained without Lord Rockingham's consent; but General Conway (with whom and the Duke of Richmond he only preserved any connection) did obtain it. Walpole.

write once more on what you tell me of Viviani<sup>2</sup>; more to satisfy you and my own conscience, than from forming any views of success. You must look on me for the future as a man who has totally done with the world, but for my amusement. I know it, my dear Sir, I know it; I laugh at it; I divert myself with it; it does not make me cross. I find all men are like all men; and how can one be angry with everybody? I used to quarrel with those that deceived me; I now only grow very civil to them; know what they are worth; don't trust them, nor care about them, but in common things behave to them as I used to do. One man is ungrateful because he is a rogue; another, because he is a man of virtue: very well—the effect is the very same: if he is the first, perhaps he is agreeable; if the second, probably disagreeable. Why seek out two others, when, perhaps, another rogue will not please me so much, and another piece of uprightness will be as unpleasant?

This is my system, and I go on pretty much as I did. My spirits are as good as ever; I wish my health was so. Since I came hither I have had a relapse, and another fit of the gout for a month. I now limp abroad again, but my eyes have lost many a sight, and all the fine weather. The only thing that provokes me, is to be told that the gout cures every other distemper. I never had any other distemper; and I am sure it takes a long time to cure itself—à la charge de revenir. When I return to England, which will be in February or March, according as the weather is fine or not, I shall concentrate my few remaining joys in Strawberry, and still be happy enough if I recover my limbs. I wish you had a Strawberry, that you might look down on grandeurs, and mortifications of grandeurs anxious to obtain the same rank, quoted this as a precedent in his favour.

<sup>2</sup> The Marquis Viviani, Spanish Chargé d'Affaires at Florence, had been raised by his Government to the rank of Envoy. Mann, who was

with the same indifference that I do. When men have paid court to kings and ministers for years, Count Lorenzi shows you what their reward is. The world talks of serving them faithfully—for what or why? What do I owe to any human creature more than he owes to me? What entitles him to my fidelity? Can those foolish words king and subject make him better than me, or me worse than him? He pays me, and I do his business—is there any other relation between him and me? In all probability he is more foolish, ignorant, vain, and selfish than I am: do those qualities entitle him to my esteem or respect, much more to any duty from me? And can the frowns of such a strutting phantom mortify one? If he deprives me of my employment without any reason, he deserves my hatred; if he refuses me what I have just pretensions to, he is insensible to merit, and, consequently, worthless himself. I should be glad to see if that would mortify me! A king is established for my convenience, that is for the convenience of everybody; his power and his riches are his wages. His ministers are placed about him, because this mighty thing is a helpless poor mortal, like other mortals, and cannot do a thousandth part of its own business. His ministers have under-officers for exactly the same reasons. What a respectable fabric! Laugh at them, my dear Sir, or pity them, if they try to do as much as they can; but, as that is seldom the case, never be mortified if they disappoint you. The Nousvoullone<sup>3</sup> ladies may be vexed if they do not dine with a princess they never saw before. It would be a comfort to me, who think the kingdom of one's own room sufficient dignity for any reasonable man. I wish my philosophy, such as it is, may have any beginning Nous voulons, the latter were nicknamed the Nousvoullone Ladies. Walpole, weight with you. I doubt it is the only service I can do for you, but it will be a great one if it has effect: it will tranquillize your mind; and I know nothing else worth seeking. Adieu!

<sup>3</sup> The Great Duchess had made a distinction between the old and new nobility, by a declaration, which

1067. TO MISS ANNE PITT.

Paris, November 4, 1765.

PRAY, Madam, what signifies being very happy, if one is very unhappy? You have sent me to the most charming people in the world, and then I am confined to my room, and then I limp abroad, and then I have the gout in my eyes, and then I get better, and then you tell me I must not sup with the very people you had bid me sup with! For my goddesses and passions and amours, Lord bless me, I can give them up. I like a cold chicken as well as ambrosia, and a reasonable woman of forty better than an immortal beauty of fifty-three; but I am not so patient under your tyrannical goodness. The night before last I went to the Luxembourg, and to be sure if I had conquered America in Germany<sup>1</sup>, I could not have been received with more attention. There was the tabouret ready for my feet, and the supper brought into the dressing-room that I might not catch cold by going into the salle. Do you know that I did not dare to touch a morsel? You might as well have made me Governor of Baratania; I saw Dr. Ann Pitt and her dread wand before my eyes, and lest she should whisk away the dishes from the rest of the company, I did not so much as tuck my napkin under my chin. Is this obedience or not, Madam? I hope it is, for I am sure it is not virtue: I was as wickedly disposed as possible, and only resisted, as saints themselves do when

LETTER 1067.—Not in C.; now p. 148.
printed from Hist. MSS. Comm., 18th Report, Appendix, Part III, vol. i. Pitt.

<sup>1</sup> Alluding to the French awe of Pitt.

they do resist, from fear. Mine, however, is very cordial and voluntary obedience, and founded on gratitude for what is past, not on interested views for what is to come. You have been good to me beyond measure, and how much soever I admire Madame de Rochefort, she will not easily shake the attachment and esteem I brought over with me. Your situation, Madam, is truly melancholy; one never wants a comfortable house more, than when one wants to be out of doors in November. Let me preach in my turn and advise you not to catch your death. You are not above a thought more herculean than I am. Planting is not—but very likely my sermon will come too late—I hope it is only a cold in your head. Keep yourself warm; don't rake nor let my Lady Bute keep you up late at supper, nor go to see if every tree you have planted with so much care and taste, is alive; indeed they will not make great shoots before April; but I fear they will be quite in leaf before Madame de Rochefort drinks tea under their shade. She does not seem to think very seriously of a journey to England; the Duc de Nivernois talks of it more in earnest. In general, the Anglomanie has had its day, and will very soon be gathered to its ancestors, departed fashions. They know nothing new of us: I tell them in vain of George Grenville's epigrams, and endeavoured t'other day to translate one of them, but was interrupted before I had been above an hour and a half about it. Then their mistakes about us are endless; they take Wilkes and Lord Sandwich for the same person; and I found out that a lady who had commended Rigby for three-quarters of an hour, and talked of the genteelness and slimness of his person, had meant Beauclerc<sup>2</sup> all the time.

<sup>2</sup> Topham Beauclerk (1739–1780), son of Lord Sidney Beauclerk (fifth son of first Duke of St. Albans), well known to readers of Boswell's Life of Johnson. Johnson's admiration for Beauclerk was by no means shared by Horace Walpole.

My knowledge of my own country is not much more recent than theirs. Nobody tells me a word of news. I am reduced to believe in the Chronicle, and I suppose shall return with a total set of false ideas, and without knowing at all whose turn it is to be virtuous. This would preserve me from meddling with fables, if the gout did not. My partiality to dogs, cats, birds is naturally so great, that I do not love to have them made to talk and act like human creatures ; but it would be too cruel to pervert their own characters, and give them false ones for us too. I might draw an old monkey<sup>3</sup> acting patriotism, while the old monkey might be dressing itself again in a lion's skin and making bishops. You see, Madam, how little the distance I am at fits me for writing fables ; and the gout has destroyed the very slender talent I had for writing anything else. One makes little better figure hobbling up Parnassus, than upon crutches at Paphos ; nor do the many precedents for both reassure me. I want to hide myself in my own chimney-corner and be forgotten, but by the very few whom I myself remember with pleasure. The part I am acting here seems little suited to what I feel within, and though I snuff the candle to try to make it burn a little briskly, it does but make it waste the faster. My greatest ambition is not to grow cross, which is a spiteful way of communicating the misfortunes of age and illness to other people. It would be unpardonable in me, who have no dignity, and who have been humoured and caressed, as if I had. Among others I should be very ungrateful not to mention Lady Mary Chabot and Madame de Bentheim : the first is all good nature, and I will add of the latter, that I have not seen three Frenchwomen so lively ; they have forgot their natural character or do not perceive that they have lost it.

<sup>3</sup> The Duke of Newcastle.

I wish, Madam, I could send you anything new, but whatever appears relates to the clergy and the Parliament, in which I believe you do not much interest yourself. The warmth increases every day, and the poor clergy are overwhelmed with satires. If they don't take my Lady Huntingdon and a body of Methodists into pay, I doubt they will be routed. Voltaire is the idol of the Parliamentarians, though his own system in the Dictionnaire Philosophique is so much more foolish and absurd than anything he has ever ridiculed; but nonsense is always excused by its own party. You have sent me, Madam, to the only society in the world where I believe such prejudices have little weight; therefore when you are worn out as I was, with madness and extravagance, come to the Luxemburgh; you will not hear the Jesuits or Lord Temple named.

1068. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Nov. 13, 1765.

I RECEIVE your letter by Lord Cowper's courier this instant, and had another yesterday. I have certainly received all you have written to me, and am glad to find you begin to get mine. This is the fourth from Paris. I wish, without farther discussions, that you would conceive how very little interest I have, because I fear you will feel it at last; and the disappointment will be the greater. I have written again in your favour, which is more than I promised; but, when I tell you that I have not had a single word of answer to all I have said from hence about you, sure you will be convinced, my dear Sir, that my credit is poor indeed. As to myself, I am most indifferent about it: I am concerned for you, who have not, I see, weaned yourself from attachment to courts and honours, which appear to me the emptiest of bubbles.

Falsehood, interest, and ingratitude, the attendants of friendship, are familiar to me ; as I told you in my last, they do not put me out of humour, and I wish I could impart to you some of my apathy. When health and life are to go so soon, what signifies whether honours and friendships precede or accompany them ?

15th.

If your Earl<sup>1</sup> acted from reason, I should think him in the right not to go to England yet. The indecency of his stay while his father was still alive, and so pressing to see him, can only be palliated by remaining, which would look as if it was the strength of his attachment that had detained him, and not disrespect ; but it is no business of mine.

You will have heard of the death of the Duke of Cumberland, which has awakened much anxiety in England, and given a glimpse of changes. The King has assured the present ministers that this event shall make no alteration, and you may be sure they are desirous of believing so. The opinions of the opposition are divided, of whom some think the rivet that held them together is gone ; others that it will strengthen them, as some who hated only the Duke will now be ready to accede. I am of neither opinion : a forced connection between a nephew and uncle who had so long hated one another was no real cement : they met in a centre of hatred to the late ministers ; while that subsists, the Duke's life or death was indifferent. On the other hand, if any are disposed to take on now, I should think they were ready to do so before : political hatred is

LETTER 1068.—<sup>1</sup> The third Earl Cowper, who had gone to travel in his father's life, fell in love at Florence with a married lady, and could not be prevailed on by the most earnest entreaties of his dying father to come to England. He continued there for many years after the death of his father and the extinction of his own passion : married an English young gentlewoman there, and in the year 1781 sent his children by her to England without coming himself. Walpole.

not so predominant in these times as political interest. It may, upon the whole, give an opening to some broader system, from the very circumstance, and, perhaps, from that alone, that it occasions such an arrangement to be talked of; but I imagine that the groundwork will remain pretty much as it is.

There seems to be a rot among princes; the Emperor, Don Philip<sup>2</sup>, and the Duke are dead: Prince Frederick, our King's youngest brother, is in the last stage of a consumption; and here we every moment expect the Dauphin's death. He received extreme unction two days ago; the prières des quarante heures have been mumbled over; for here they still die in ceremony, though few pretend to more than acting that farce; few to so much as that. He himself is to be pitied, and they say expressed his sense of his fate; to die at thirty-six, Dauphin of France, 'sans avoir joui, ni fait de bien à personne'—if he would have felt the last, he is a real loss.

15th, at night.

I am just come from the Duke of Richmond's, whose audience had been postponed on the Dauphin's danger. He has received a courier this evening, that appoints him to be at Fontainebleau the day after to-morrow, the Dauphin being what is called better. We thought him dead, for all post-horses are stopped, and nobody suffered to come from Fontainebleau, as the court may want to remove at a minute's warning. Paris in the meantime is a solitude, and trist; but gay enough for me, who but just began to go about again. The English, who are here in droves, do not take these royal deaths much to heart; the Duke of Beaufort made a ball two nights ago in the hotel where I lodge, at which we were no fewer than forty-eight. I was forced to go in my own defence, and to stay as late as I could, as I had no chance of getting a wink of sleep but by being worn out: my plan succeeded. In truth, as I stay here only to avoid being in England, it is pretty indifferent to me how I pass my time. When I have broken from politics, and shown that I have, I shall return to my own château, and quiet.

<sup>2</sup> The Duke of Parma.

Colonel Barré arrived last night, but had sent a refusal before him to England of the place of Irish Vice-Treasurer. I dined where he did to-day, and thought he was not quite so determined as he had imagined. I never was in a room with him before; his style is vulgar; but that did not surprise me. Wilkes is here too; in the same tone and with less parts. One likes to see men that posterity will wish to have seen: bate that curiosity, and they are commonly not just the men you would wish to see much. Wilkes's day is over; Barré's, I think, to come.

How I wish, my dear Sir, that your new court may enliven your life, and not be the cause of any mortification in it! That it may be is the case of courts, that fill up the succession of time, and add nothing to ennoble it. When one thinks over the number of courts that are, and have been, of how many intrigues and vexations they have been the source, and how little they deserve, or have deserved, past, present, or future esteem, can one help lumping them together, and then dropping the thought of them with contempt? I consider the multitudes to whom they are important, as so many old Brantômes, who admired and recorded every proud lord and every lewd lady to whom he had bowed in the guard-room. Laugh at them, and you will be happy.

P.S. I trouble you to forward the enclosed to Hamilton<sup>3</sup> and direct it.

<sup>3</sup> Resident at Naples. Walpole.

My Lady Orford has lost another husband<sup>4</sup>. Will she try a third? or will a third trust her?

The King, who had promised it, has confirmed the assurance of the Garter to Lord Albemarle<sup>5</sup>, on the Duke's death. It is a handsome compliment to his uncle's memory. There will be some struggle for the other two ribands. I don't care about them: I am only interested about the red for you.

1069. TO LADY MARY COKE.

Paris, Nov. 17, 1765.

YOUR heart, Lady Mary, is too feeling for a world in which ingratitude and death reign. I am heartily sorry for your loss of Lady Yarmouth; she was a very valuable woman; but you must not give way to all the friendship you are capable of. By some means or other, it will embitter your whole life; and though it is very insipid to be indifferent, the vexations consequential of attachments are much too dearly bought by any satisfaction they produce. Perhaps if death was the only dissolvent of connections, one would run the risk, because esteem is mixed with grief; the sensation has a kind of sweetness in it, but it is so seldom that friendship is mutual, that it rarely awaits the trial of a total separation; and who would be more concerned for another, than that person would be for you? If I was younger, I certainly should not preach this doctrine to you, Madam, but I know your worth, I do not know that of many more, and I am sorry to see you so often miserable; not one in a hundred deserves such sincerity as yours. I am got again a little into the world,

<sup>4</sup> Sewallis Shirley, second husband of Lady Orford. Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> George Keppel, third Earl of Albemarle, one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, and favourite of William, Duke of Cumberland. Walpole.

LETTER 1069.—Not in C.; reprinted from Letters and Journals of Lady Mary Coke, vol. iii. pp. xviii-xix.

and during my illness received great marks of kindness and attention from several persons. But you must not believe, Madam, the ridiculous stories which have been propagated in England—I suppose to laugh at me. The circle of my acquaintance here is narrow, and lies amongst the most reasonable people I could find, who treat me with great goodness and compassion, but who are too sensible, and I hope think me so, to commend my person or admire me, as I hear has been reported. I speak their language too ill even to give way to my natural spirits, and though I trust I shall find them again at my return, I flatter myself that you will not perceive me become a coxcomb, nor in love with myself at eight and forty, and after five months of gout. I hope to be good-humoured to the last, but it will be a little hard if my cheerfulness is taken for vanity. I dare not now, after what I have heard, joke on my passions, lest these should pass for pretensions, nor admire Madame de la Vallière's eyes, lest some kind body or other should talk of mine. You know me, Lady Mary, and I hope will acquit me of any follies of self-love. I have many others, and am willing to retain them, but on that head, indeed, I have not been guilty. Paris is still a desert. The Dauphin, who received the last sacraments two or three days ago, languishes on. However, he has mended so much, that they have appointed the Duke of Richmond's audience to-day, and he is accordingly gone to Fontainebleau. I question whether the Duchess's will not be prevented for some time, as the Dauphin cannot last many days. Other French news I have none; and full as little of English. Nobody will ever tell me the Duke of Dorset's will, or whether the Duke of Cumberland made one: but everybody says, 'I tell you no news, because I conclude you have it from better hands.' I would be content to know what has turned things round so, that my Lady Bolinbroke is in disgrace at Bedford House, and my Lord in favour there. These may be old stories in London, but would be very new to me. You see I am humble in my curiosity! You will soon see the Duke of Beaufort from hence, will find him improved in his person, good-natured and civil. I am glad to find, Madam, that Lady Brown is a friend of yours: she is uncommonly good-humoured and agreeably cheerful. Lord and Lady Fife find her a great resource. Though I have been here now above two months, I have seen few of the beauties and none of the Princes of the blood. Above five weeks I was confined, or at least an invalid: the Dauphin's illness has locked up everybody at Fontainebleau. However, as I think this will be my last expedition across the sea, I endeavour and intend to see as much as I can. This is no very difficult task, as variety certainly does not compose the life of the French. They live by the clock, by the almanac, and by custom. I think I could with great truth write travels to Paris, that would totally contradict all ideas received of the French in England. I like many of the people, and with great reason; am reconciled to several things that displeased me at first; but there wants that singularity which, however unreasonable, makes every English character a novelty. Though the country and the people are so new to me, I find it more difficult to say anything new in my letters from hence than ever I did in England. When I find that the case, it is time, you will allow, to finish. Je ne m'ennuie pas, mais je vous ennuirois—in short, as the French don't love laughing, I will reserve my spirits till we meet in our box at the Opera. I tumble down ten times in the day, and am sensible that I ought to grow old; but, I don't know how, I still flatter myself that I shall live to be foolish again. Not in public, where I intend to observe all the decorum and dignity of the gout; but I doubt my friends will not find that my wrinkles are very serious. Wrinkles, I assure you, there are, new ones too; and if there were not, I would paint them sooner than lie under the calumny of being charming. This does not imply, Lady Mary, that I give up the least tittle of my claim to your heart; on the contrary, I pretend that you (and you only) should see my stick (if I am forced to return with one) in the light of a crook, for in spite of Madame de la Valière, &c., I am still and ever will be

Your Pastor fido,
HOR. WALPOLE.

1070. To THOMAS GRAY.

Paris, Nov. 19, 1765.

You are very kind to inquire so particularly after my gout. I wish I may not be too circumstantial in my answer: but you have tapped a dangerous topic; I can talk gout by the hour. It is my great mortification, and has disappointed all the hopes that I had built on temperance and hardiness. I have resisted like a hermit, and exposed myself to all weathers and seasons like a smuggler: and in vain. I have, however, still so much of the obstinacy of both professions left, that I think I shall continue, and cannot obey you in keeping myself warm. I have gone through my second fit under one blanket, and already go about in a silk waistcoat with my bosom unbuttoned. In short, I am as prejudiced to my regimen, though so ineffectual, as I could have been to all I expected from it. The truth is, I am almost as willing to have the gout as to be liable to catch cold; and must run up stairs and down, in and out of doors, when I will, or I cannot have the least satisfaction. This will convince you how readily

I comply with another of your precepts, walking as soon as I am able.—For receipts, you may trust me for making use of none: I would not see a physician at the worst, but have quacked myself as boldly as quacks treat others. I laughed at your idea of quality-receipts, it came so apropos. There is not a man or woman here that is not a perfect old nurse, and who does not talk gruel and anatomy with equal fluency and ignorance. One instance shall serve: Madame de Bouzols, Marshal Berwick's daughter, assured me there was nothing so good for the gout, as to preserve the parings of my nails in a bottle close stopped. When I try any illustrious nostrum, I shall give the preference to this.

So much for the gout! I told you what was coming. As to the ministry, I know and care very little about them. I told you and told them long ago, that if ever a change happened I would bid adieu to politics for ever. Do me the justice to allow that I have not altered with the times. I was so impatient to put this resolution in execution, that I hurried out of England before I was sufficiently recovered. I shall not run the same hazard again in haste; but will stay here till I am perfectly well, and the season of warm weather coming on or arrived; though the charms of Paris have not the least attraction for me, nor would keep me an hour on their own account. For the city itself, I cannot conceive where my eyes were: it is the ugliest beastly town in the universe. I have not seen a mouthful of verdure out of it, nor have they anything green but their treillage and window-shutters. Trees cut into fire-shovels, and stuck into pedestals of chalk, compose their country. Their boasted knowledge of society is reduced to talking of their suppers, and every malady they have about them, or know of. The Dauphin is at the point of death; every morning the physicians frame an account of him; and happy is he or she who can produce a copy of this lie, called a bulletin. The night before last, one of these was produced at supper where I was ; it was read, and said he had had une évacuation fétide. I beg your pardon, though you are not at supper. The old lady of the house (who, by the way, is quite blind, was the Regent's mistress for a fortnight, and is very agreeable) called out, 'Oh, they have forgot to mention that he threw down his chamber-pot, and was forced to change his bed.' There were present several women of the first rank ; as Madame de la Valière, whom you remember Duchesse de Vaujour, and who is still miraculously pretty, though fifty-three ; a very handsome Madame de Forcalquier, and others—nor was this conversation at all particular to that evening.

Their gaiety is not greater than their delicacy—but I will not expatiate. In short, they are another people from what they were. They may be growing wise, but the intermediate passage is dullness. Several of the women are agreeable, and some of the men ; but the latter are in general vain and ignorant. The savans—I beg their pardons, the philosophes—are insupportable, superficial, overbearing, and fanatic : they preach incessantly, and their avowed doctrine is atheism ; you would not believe how openly—don't wonder, therefore, if I should return a Jesuit. Voltaire himself does not satisfy them. One of their lady devotees said of him, 'Il est bigot, c'est un déiste.'

I am as little pleased with their taste in trifles. Crébillon is entirely out of fashion, and Marivaux a proverb : marivauder and marivaudage are established terms for being prolix and tiresome. I thought that we were fallen, but they are ten times lower.

Notwithstanding all I have said, I have found two or three societies that please me ; am amused with the novelty of the whole, and should be sorry not to have come. The Dumenil is, if possible, superior to what you remember. I am sorry not to see the Clairon; but several persons whose judgements seem the soundest prefer the former. Prévile is admirable in low comedy. The mixture of Italian comedy and comic operas, prettily written, and set to Italian music, at the same theatre, is charming, and gets the better both of their operas and French comedy; the latter of which is seldom full, with all its merit. Petits-mâîtres are obsolete, like our Lords Foppington—tout le monde est philosophe—When I grow very sick of this last nonsense, I go and compose myself at the Chartreuse, where I am almost tempted to prefer Le Sœur to every painter I know. Yet what new old treasures are come to light, routed out of the Louvre, and thrown into new lumber-rooms at Versailles!—But I have not room to tell you what I have seen! I will keep this and other chapters for Strawberry. Adieu! and thank you.

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

Old Mariette has shown me a print by Diepenbecke<sup>1</sup> of the Duke and Duchess of Newcastle at dinner with their family. You would oblige me, if you would look into all their Graces' folios, and see if it is not a frontispiece to some one of them<sup>2</sup>. Then he has such a Petitot of Madame LETTER 1070.—<sup>1</sup> Abraham Diepenbecke (d. 1675), a Flemish painter, and a pupil of Rubens.

<sup>2</sup> 'The print you ask after is the frontispiece to Nature's Pictures drawn by Fancy's pencil. But lest there should be any mistake, I must tell you, the family are not at dinner, but sitting round a rousing fire and telling stories. The room is just such a one as we lived in at Rheims: I mean as to the glazing and ceiling. The chimney is supported by Cariatides: over the mantelpiece the arms of the family. The Duke and Duchess are crowned with laurel. A servant stands behind him, holding a hat and feather. Another is shutting a window. Diepenbecke delin. and (I think) S. Clouwe sculps. It is a very pretty and curious print, and I thank you for the sight of it. If it ever was a picture, what a picture to have!' (Gray to Walpole, Dec. 13, 1765.)

d'Olonne<sup>3</sup>! The Pompadour offered him fifty louis for it—alack, so would I!

1071. TO GROSVENOR BEDFORD.

DEAR SIR,

Paris, Nov. 20, 1765.

I should hope you was convinced that you need not at any time wait for business, to write to me. I am always happy to hear of you, and glad to receive your letters.

I caught cold after I had been here a fortnight, and the gout returned in both feet, and in one of my eyes, with what gave me still more uneasiness, constant sickness at my stomach, so that I almost loathed every kind of food, and could bear no sort above two days together. Thank God! after six weeks all is over, my sickness is gone and my appetite returned. My feet continued long swelled, and my legs swelled so much every night, that I feared that weakness would remain, but it is gone too, and I have nothing to complain of now, but weakness. I wish you got as easily quit of this horrid distemper. My gout leaves no traces at all, though so severe while it stays.

I will beg you to keep the money till my return, which will be when the severity of the winter is over; but I am grown a great coward, and dare not venture travelling in bad weather, nor risk being laid up on the road. I am not less afraid of the House of Commons, when I am persuaded long attendance would bring back the gout, of which I own my dread is extreme. The same apprehension will prevent my going more southward. I shall be very glad to be in my own house again. Adieu, dear Sir, and believe me ever

Most cordially and affectionately yours,

HORACE WALPOLE.

<sup>3</sup> Catherine Henriette d'Angennes (d. 1714), Comtesse d'Olonne. This miniature afterwards came into Horace Walpole's possession.

1072. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Nov. 21, 1765.

MADAME GEOFFRIN has given me a parcel for your Ladyship with two knotting-bags, which I will send by the first opportunity that seems safe: but I hear of nothing but difficulties; and shall, I believe, be saved from ruin myself, from not being able to convey any purchases into England. Thus I shall have made an almost fruitless journey to France, if I can neither fling away my money, nor preserve my health. At present, indeed, the gout is gone. I have had my house swept, and made as clean as I could—no very easy matter in this country; but I live in dread of seven worse spirits entering in. The terror I am under of a new fit has kept me from almost seeing anything. The damps and fogs are full as great and frequent here as in London; but there is a little frost to-day, and I shall begin my devotions to-morrow. It is not being fashionable to visit churches; but I am de la vieille cour; and I beg your Ladyship to believe that I have no youthful pretensions. The Duchess of Richmond tells me that they have made twenty foolish stories about me in England, and say that my person is admired here. I cannot help what is said without foundation; but the French have neither lost their eyes, nor I my senses. A skeleton I was born—skeleton I am—and death will have no trouble in making me one. I have not made any alteration in my dress, and certainly did not study it in England. Had I had any such ridiculous thoughts, the gout is too sincere a monitor to leave one under any such error. Pray, Madam, tell Lord and Lady Holland what I say; they have heard these idle tales; and they know so many of my follies, that I should be sorry they believed more of me than are true. If all arose from Madame Geoffrin calling me in joke le nouveau Richelieu, I give it under my hand that I resemble him in nothing but wrinkles.

Your Ladyship is much in the right to forbear reading politics. I never look at the political letters that come hither in the Chronicles. I was sick to death of them before I set out; and perhaps should not have stirred from home, if I had not been sick of them and all they relate to. If anybody could write ballads and epigrams, à la bonne heure! But dull personal abuse in prose is tiresome indeed. A serious invective against a pickpocket, or written by a pickpocket, who has so little to do as to read?

The Dauphin continues languishing to his exit, and keeps everybody at Fontainebleau. There is a little bustle now about the Parliament of Bretagne; but you may believe, Madam, that when I was tired of the squabbles at London, I did not propose to interest myself in quarrels at Hull or Liverpool. Indeed, if the Duc de Chaulnes<sup>1</sup> commanded at Rennes, or Pomenars<sup>2</sup> was sent to prison, I might have a little curiosity. You wrong me in thinking I quoted a text from my Saint<sup>3</sup> ludicrously. On the contrary, I am so true a bigot, that, if she could have talked nonsense, I should, like any other bigot, believe she was inspired. The season, and the emptiness of Paris, prevent anything new from appearing. All I can send your Ladyship is a very pretty logogriphe, made by the old blind Madame du Deffand, whom perhaps you know—certainly must have heard of. I sup there very often; and she gave me this last night—you must guess it.

*Quoique je forme un corps, je ne suis qu'une idée;
Plus ma beauté vieillit, plus elle est décidée :*

LETTER 1072.—<sup>1</sup> Governor of Brittany in the time of Madame de Sévigné. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> See Madame de Sévigné's letters. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Madame de Sévigné. Walpole.

*Il faut, pour me trouver, ignorer d'où je viens :
Je tiens tout de lui, qui réduit tout à rien<sup>4</sup>.*

Lady Mary Chabot inquires often after your Ladyship. Your other two friends are not yet returned to Paris; but I have had several obliging messages from the Duchesse d'Aiguillon.

It pleased me extremely, Madam, to find no mention of your own gout in your letter. I always apprehend it for you, as you try its temper to the utmost, especially by staying late in the country, which you know it hates. Lord! it has broken my spirit so, that I believe it might make me leave Strawberry at a minute's warning. It has forbid me tea, and been obeyed; and I thought that one of the most difficult points to carry with me. Do let us be well, Madam, and have no gouty notes to compare!

I am your Ladyship's most faithful, humble servant,
HOR. WALPOLE.

1073. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, Nov. 21, 1765.

You must not be surprised when my letters arrive long after their date. I write them at my leisure, and send them when I find any Englishmen going to London, that I may not be kept in check, if they were to pass through both French and English posts.

Your letter to Madame Roland, and the books for her, will set out very securely in a day or two. My bookseller here happens to be of Rheims, and knows Madame Roland, comme deux gouttes d'eau. This perhaps is not a well-placed simile, but the French always use one, and when they are once established, and one knows the tune, it does not signify sixpence for the sense.

<sup>4</sup> The word is Noblesse. Walpole.

My gout and my stick have entirely left me. I totter still, it is true, but I trust shall be able to whisk about at Strawberry as well almost as ever. When that hour strikes, to be sure I shall not be very sorry. The sameness of the life here is worse than anything but English politics and the House of Commons. Indeed, I have a mind still to see more people here, more sights, and more plays, and more of the Dumenil. The Dauphin, who is not dead yet, detains the whole court at Fontainebleau, whither I dare not venture, as the situation is very damp, and the lodgings abominable. Sights too, I have scarce seen any yet; and I must satisfy my curiosity, for hither, I think, I shall never come again. No, let us sit down quietly and comfortably, and enjoy our coming old age. Oh, if you are in earnest, and will transplant yourself to Roehampton, how happy I shall be! You know, if you believe an experience of above thirty years, that you are one of the very, very few, for whom I really care a straw. You know how long I have been vexed at seeing so little of you. What has one to do, when one grows tired of the world, as we both do, but to draw nearer and nearer, and gently waste the remains of life with the friends with whom one began it! Young and happy people will have no regard for us and our old stories, and they are in the right: but we shall not tire one another; we shall laugh together, when nobody is by to laugh at us, and we may think ourselves young enough when we see nobody younger. Roehampton is a delightful spot, at once cheerful and retired. You will amble in your chaise about Richmond Park; we shall see one another as often as we like; I shall frequently peep at London, and bring you tales of it, and we shall sometimes touch a card with the Clive, and laugh our fill—for I must tell you, I desire to die when I have nobody left to laugh with me. I have never yet seen or heard anything serious, that was not ridiculous. Jesuits, Methodists, philosophers, politicians, the hypocrite Rousseau, the scoffer Voltaire, the encyclopedists, the Humes, the Lytteltons, the Grenvilles, the atheist tyrant of Prussia, and the mountebank of history, Mr. Pitt, all are to me but impostors in their various ways. Fame or interest are their objects—and after all their parade, I think a ploughman who sows, reads his almanac, and believes the stars but so many farthing candles, created to prevent his falling into a ditch as he goes home at night, a wiser and more rational being, and I am sure an honestest than any of them—Oh, I am sick of visions and systems, that shove one another aside, and come over again, like the figures in a moving picture! Rabelais brightens up to me as I see more of the world; he treated it as it deserved, laughed at it all, and (as I judge from myself) ceased to hate it; for I find hatred an unjust preference. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

1074. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Nov. 28, 1765.

WHAT, another letter! Yes, yes, Madam; though I must whip and spur, I must try to make my thanks keep up with your favours: for any other return, you have quite distanced me. This is to acknowledge the receipt of the Duchess d'Aiguillon—you may set what sum you please against the debt. She is delightful, and has much the most of a woman of quality of any I have seen, and more cheerfulness too; for, to show your Ladyship that I am sincere, that my head is not turned, and that I retain some of my prejudices still, I avow that gaiety, whatever it was formerly, is no longer the growth of this country; and I will own too that Paris can produce women of quality that I should not call women of fashion: I will not use so ungentle a term as vulgar; but for their indelicacy, I could call it still worse. Yet with these faults, and the latter is an enormous one in my English eyes, many of the women are exceedingly agreeable. I cannot say so much for the men—always excepting the Duc de Nivernois. You would be entertained for a quarter of an hour with his Duchess—she is the Duke of Newcastle properly placed, that is, chattering incessantly out of devotion, and making interest against the devil that she may dispose of bishoprics in the next world.

Madame d'Efmont is expected to-day, which will run me again into arrears. I don't know how it is. Yes, I do: it is natural to impose on bounty, and I am like the rest of the world: I am going to abuse your goodness, because I know nobody so great. Besides being the best friend in the world, you are the best commissionnaire in the world, Madam: you understand from friendship to scissors. The enclosed model was trusted to me, to have two pair made as well as possible—but I really blush at my impertinence. However, all the trouble I mean to give your Ladyship is, to send your groom of the chambers to bespeak them; and a pair besides of the common size for a lady, as well made as possible, for the honour of England's steel.

The two knotting-bags from Madame Geoffrin went away by a clergyman two days ago; and I concerted all the tricks the doctor and I could think of, to elude the vigilance of the Custom House officers.

With this, I send your Ladyship the Orpheline Léguée<sup>1</sup>: its intended name was the Anglomanie—my only reason for sending it; for it has little merit, and had as slender success, being acted but five times. However, there is nothing else new.

The Dauphin continues in the same languishing and hopeless state, but with great coolness and firmness. Somebody gave him t'other day The Preparation for Death<sup>2</sup>; he said, 'C'est la nouvelle du jour.'

I have nothing more to say, but what I have always to say, Madam, from the beginning of my letters to the end, that I am

Your Ladyship's most obliged and most devoted humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

Nov. 28, three o'clock.

Oh, Madam, Madam, Madam, what do you think I have found since I wrote my letter this morning? I am out of my wits! Never was anything like my luck; it never forsakes me! I have found Count Grammont's picture! I believe I shall see company upon it, certainly keep the day holy. I went to the Grands Augustins to see the pictures of the reception of the Knights of the Holy Ghost: they carried me into a chamber full of their portraits; I was looking for Bassompierre<sup>3</sup>; my laquais de louage opened a door, and said, 'Here are more.' One of the first that struck me was Philibert Comte de Grammont! It is old, not at all handsome, but has a great deal of finesse in the countenance. I shall think of nothing now but having it copied. If I had seen or done nothing else, I should be content with my journey hither.

1075. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, Nov. 29, 1765.

As I answered your short letter with a very long one, I shall be shorter in answer to your long, which I received

<sup>2</sup> The title of a French book of devotion. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> François (1579-1646), Maréchal de Bassompierre, a prominent personage at the court of Henry IV, and author of Memoirs first published in 1665.

late last night from Fontainebleau: it is not very necessary; but as Lord William Gordon<sup>1</sup> sets out for England on Monday, I take that opportunity.

The Duke of Richmond tells me that Choiseul has promised everything<sup>2</sup>. I wish it may be performed, and speedily, as it will give you an opportunity of opening the Parliament with great éclat. My opinion you know is, that this is the moment for pushing them and obtaining.

Thank you for all you say about my gout. We have had a week of very hard frost, that has done me great good, and rebraced me. The swelling of my legs is quite gone. What has done me more good, is having entirely left off tea, to which I believe the weakness of my stomach was owing, having had no sickness since. In short, I think I am cured of everything but my fears. You talk coolly of going as far as Naples, and propose my going with you. I would not go so far, if Naples was the direct road to the New Jerusalem. I have no thought or wish but to get home, and be quiet for the rest of my days, which I shall most certainly do the first moment the season will let me; and if I once get to London again, shall be scarce tempted ever to lie in an inn more. I have refused to go to Aubigné<sup>3</sup>, though I should lie but one night on the road. You may guess what I have suffered, when I am grown so timorous about my health. However, I am again reverted to my system of water, and trying to recover my hardiness—but nothing has at all softened me towards physicians.

You see I have given you a serious answer, though I am rather disposed to smile at your proposal. Go to Italy! for what?—Oh, to quit—do you know, I think that as

LETTER 1075.—<sup>1</sup> Second son of third Duke of Gordon.

<sup>2</sup> Choiseul had agreed to settle the affair of the Canada bills.

<sup>3</sup> The Duke of Richmond's residence in France.

W. & A. G. P. & Co. London

Charles Lennox
3rd Duke of Richmond from a mezzotint by J. Watson after G. Romney.

idle a thought as the other. Pray stay where you are, and do some good to your country, or retire when you cannot—but don't put your finger in your eye and cry after the holidays and sugar-plums of Park Place. You have engaged and must go through, or be hindered. Could you tell the world the reason? Would not all men say you had found yourself incapable of what you had undertaken? I have no patience with your thinking so idly. It would be a reflection on your understanding and character, and a want of resolution unworthy of you.

My advice is, to ask for the first great government that falls, if you will not take your regiment again; to continue acting vigorously and honestly where you are. Things are never stable enough in our country to give you a prospect of a long slavery. Your defect is irresolution. When you have taken your post, act up to it; and if you are driven from it, your retirement will then be as honourable, and more satisfactory than your administration. I speak frankly, as my friendship for you directs. My way of acting (though a private instance) is agreeable to my doctrine. I determined, whenever our opposition should be over, to have done with politics; and you see I have adhered to my resolution by coming hither; and therefore you may be convinced that I speak my thoughts. I don't ask your pardon, because I should be forced to ask my own, if I did not tell you what I think the best for you. You have life and Park Place enough to come, and you have not had five months of gout. Make yourself independent honourably, which you may do by a government; but if you will take my advice, don't accept a ministerial place when you cease to be a minister. The former is a reward due to your profession and services; the latter is a degradation. You know the haughtiness of my spirit; I give you no advice but what I would follow.

I sent Lady Ailesbury the Orpheline Léguée: a poor performance; but the subject made me think she would like to see it. I am over head and ears at Count Caylus's auction, and have bought half of it for a song—but I am still in greater felicity and luck, having discovered, by mere accident, a portrait of Count Grammont, after having been in search of one these fifteen years, and assured there was no such thing. Apropos, I promised you my own: but besides that there is nobody here that excels in painting skeletons, seriously, their painters are bitter bad, and as much inferior to Reynolds and Ramsay, as Hudson to Vandyck. I had rather stay till my return. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1076. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Nov. 30, 1765.

ALLELUJAH! Monsieur l'Envoyé! I was going to direct to you by this title; but if your credentials are not arrived, as I hope they are not, that I may be the first to notify your new dignity to you, I did not know how your new court would take it, and therefore I postpone your surprise, till you have opened my letter—if it loiters on the road like its predecessors, I shall be out of all patience. In short, my last express tells me that the King will name you Envoy in your new credentials. You must judge of the pleasure it gives me to have obtained this for you, my dear Sir, by the vexation I expressed on thinking I could not effect it. All answer, I suppose, to my solicitations was deferred till I could be told they had succeeded.

You must forget or erase most of what I had said to you lately, for when I can serve my friends I am content. Your letters had been so many, and so earnest, and I so little expected any good from my intercession, that I was warmer than I wish I had been; and the more, as I see I was in part unjust. I doubted everybody but Mr. Conway, and did not think that he alone had power to do what I desired, and could not bear you should think I neglected what I wished so much, pleasing you. I have done it to my great satisfaction, since it is what you had so much at heart,—but remember, I don't retract my sermon. I think exactly as I did, that one is in the wrong to place one's peace of mind on courts and honours: their joys are most momentary, violently overbalanced by disappointments, and empty in possession. I shall not excuse you if you have more of these solitudes; but I will rejoice with you over this one triumph, of which I will do you the justice to believe I am more glad than you are. You must thank Mr. Conway, by whom I obtained it, as if you owed it all to him. You know I hate to be talked of for these things, and therefore insist that my name be not mentioned to him or anybody but your brother. It will be the last favour I shall ever ask; my constant plan has been to be nobody, and for the rest of my days I shall be more nobody than ever. You must gratify me with this silence. I did not think it would be necessary, or I should have made it a condition, for I have declared so much that I would meddle with nothing, that it would contradict those declarations, and disoblige some, for whom I have refused to interest myself.

As I grow better, I am more reconciled to this country; yet I shall return home in the spring. Apprehensions of the gout make one as old as the gout itself, and cure one of all prospects. I must resign that pleasing one, so long entertained, of seeing you at Florence. Your new establishment forbids my expecting you in England. Had I consulted my own wishes I should have let you have been cross and come home. Happily I am not so selfish. I have learnt, too, not to build on pleasures; they are not of my age. I must go and grow old, and bear ennui; must try to make comforts a recompense for living in a country where I do not love the people. My great spirits think all this a difficult task; but spirits themselves are useless, when one has not the same people to laugh with one as formerly. I have no joy in new acquaintance, because I can have no confidence in them. Experience and time draw a line between older persons and younger, which is never to be passed with satisfaction; and though the whole bent of my mind was formed for youth, fortunately I know the ridicule of letting it last too long, and had rather act a part unnatural to me, than a foolish one. I don't love acting a part at all—if I grow very tired of it I will return hither, and vary the scene; this country is more favourable to latter age than England, and what a foreigner does is of no consequence anywhere. Adieu! my dear Envoy! My letters lately seem very grave, but analyse them, you will find them very foolish.

December 1st.

I receive your letter of the 14th. Upon my word our correspondence marches sedately! What do they do with our letters? They are not grown more important than they used to be. Good postmasters, secretaries of state, or whoever you are, seal this letter again quickly, and send it on. You shall detain my next as long as you please. If your curiosity is not satisfied with reading the trifles I have writ to Sir Horace for four-and-twenty years, I have nothing to say: you do me too much honour, and I hope you will be repaid by four-and-twenty years more (I mean if Sir Horace and I don't meet sooner), I promise you I will continue writing to him—for your satisfaction. Well, my dear Sir, you are Envoy, and I hope will be delighted with all these Austrian etiquettes and ceremonies—I should be sick enough of them to send back my credentials unopened. You have enjoyed all the benefits hitherto of a court life, without a court: sure the husk was preferable to the kernel.

1077. TO GEORGE AUGUSTUS SELWYN.

DEAR GEORGE,

Paris, Dec. 2, 1765.

In return for your kind line by Mr. Beauclerk I send you a whole letter, but I was in your debt before, for making over Madame du Deffand to me, who is delicious; that is, as often as I can get her fifty years back; but she is as eager about what happens every day as I am about the last century. I sup there twice a week, and bear all her dull company for the sake of the Regent. I might go to her much oftener, but my curiosity to see everybody and everything is insatiable, especially having lost so much time by my confinement. I have been very ill a long time, and mending much longer, for every two days undo the ground I get. The fogs and damp, which, with your leave, are greater and more frequent than in England, kill me. However, it is the country in the world to be sick and grow old in. The first step towards being in fashion is to lose an eye or a tooth. Young people I conclude there are, but where they exist I don't guess: not that I complain; it is charming to totter into vogue. If I could but run about all the morning, I should be content to limp into good company in the evening. They humour me and fondle me so, and are so good-natured, and make me keep my armed-chair, and rise for nobody, and hand out nobody, and don't stare at one's being a skeleton, that I grow to like them exceedingly, and to be pleased with living here, which was far from the case at first: but then there was no soul in Paris but philosophers, whom I wished in heaven, though they do not wish themselves so. They are so overbearing and so underbred!

Your old flame, the Queen, was exceedingly kind to me at my presentation. She has been ever since at Fontainebleau, watching her son, whose death is expected every day, though it is as much the fashion not to own it, as if he was of the immortal house of Brunswick. Madame Geoffrin is extremely what I had figured her, only with less wit and more sense than I expected. The Duchess d'Aiguillon is delightful, frank, and jolly, and handsome and good-humoured, with dignity too. There is another set in which I live much, and to my taste, but very different from all I have named, Madame de Rochfort, and the set at the Luxembourg. My newest acquaintance is Monsieur de Maurepas, with whom I am much taken, though his countenance and person are so like the late Lord Hardwicke. From the little I have seen of him, we have reason, I believe, to thank Madame de Pompadour for his disgrace. At the Marquis de Brancas' I dined with the Duke de Brissac, in his red stockings: in short, I think my winter will be very well amused, whether Mr. Garrick and Mr. Pitt act or not.

Pray tell Lord Holland, that I have sent him the few new things that I thought would entertain him for a moment, though none of them have much merit. I would have written to him, had I had anything to tell him; which, you perceive by what I have said, I had not. The affair of the Parliament of Bretagne, and the intended trial of the famous Mons. de la Chalotais<sup>1</sup> by commission, against which the Parliament of Paris strongly inveighs, is the great subject in agitation; but I know little of the matter, and was too sick of our own Parliaments to interest myself about these. The Hôtel de Carnavalet sends its blessings to you. I never pass it without saying an Ave Maria de Rabutin-Chantal, gratiâ plena! The Abbé de Malherbe has given orders that I should see Livry whenever I please. Pray tell me which convent was that of nos Sœurs de Sainte Marie, where our friend used to go on the evening that Madame de Grignan set out for Provence?

LETTER 1077. —<sup>1</sup> Louis René de Caraduec de la Chalotais (1701–1785), Procureur-Général of the Parliament of Rennes. La Chalotais incurred the resentment of the Duc d'Aiguillon, Governor of Brittany, who caused him, with his son and four others, to be arrested (Nov. 1765) on a false charge of conspiracy against the King. Their trial, which excited intense interest throughout France, took place first before com-

My best compliments to Mr. Williams: has Lord Rockingham done anything for him yet? or has the Duke of Newcastle his old power of dispensing with promises? I sent my Lady Townshend, as long ago as by Lady Hertford, two silver knives which she desired, but cannot hear by any way that she received them. I could ask twenty other questions; but some I had better not ask, and the rest I should not care whether they were answered or not. We have swarms of English; but most of them know not Joseph, and Joseph does not desire to know them. I live with none of them but Crawford and Lord Ossory, the latter of whom I am extremely sorry is returning to England. I recommend him to Mr. Williams as one of the properest and most amiable young men I ever knew.

I beg your pardon, my dear Sir, for this idle letter; yet don't let it lie in your work-basket. When you have a quarter of an hour awake, and to spare, I wish you would bestow it on me. There are no such things as bons mots here to send you, and I cannot hope that you will send me your own. Next to them, I should like Charles Townshend's, but I don't desire Betty's<sup>2</sup>.

missaries, and finally in the royal council. Though their innocence was clear, La Chalotais and his friends were exiled by Louis XV.

This injustice was redressed in the next reign.

<sup>2</sup> Betty Neale, who kept a fruit shop in St. James' Street.

I forgot to tell you that I sometimes go to Baron d'Olbach's<sup>3</sup>; but I have left off his dinners, as there was no bearing the authors, and philosophers, and savants, of which he has a pigeon-house full. They soon turned my head with a new system of antediluvian deluges, which they have invented to prove the eternity of matter. The Baron is persuaded that Pall Mall is paved with lava or deluge stones. In short, nonsense for nonsense, I like the Jesuits better than the philosophers. Were ever two men so like in their persons, or so unlike in their dispositions, as Dr. Gem<sup>4</sup> and Brand? Almost the first time I ever saw Gem, he said to me, 'Sir, I am serious, I am of a very serious turn!' Yes, truly! Say a great deal for me to Lord March, and to the Rena's dog's touffe ébouriffée. The old Président<sup>5</sup> would send his compliments to you, if he remembered you or anything else.

When we three meet again at Strawberry, I think I shall be able at least to divert Mr. Williams; but till then you must keep my counsel. Madame du Deffand says I have le feu moqueur, and I have not hurt myself a little by laughing at whisk and Richardson, though I have steered clear of the chapter of Mr. Hume; the only Trinity now in fashion here. Apropos, I see by the papers that the Bishop of London<sup>6</sup> is suppressing mass-houses. When he was Bishop of Peterborough and parson of Twickenham, he suffered one under his nose. Did the Duchess of Norfolk get him translated to London? I should conclude so; and that this was the first opportunity he had of being ungrateful. Adieu! my dear Sir, yours most sincerely,

HORACE WALPOLE.

<sup>3</sup> Paul Thiry (1728-1798), Baron d'Holbach, a contributor to the Encyclopédie.

<sup>4</sup> An English physician resident in Paris.

<sup>5</sup> The Président Hénault.

<sup>6</sup> Thomas Terrick.

1078. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, Dec. 5, 1765.

I HAVE not above a note's worth to say; but as Lord Ossory sets out to-morrow, I just send you a line. The Dauphin, if he is still alive, which some folks doubt, is kept so only by cordials; though the Bishop of Glandève has assured the Queen, that he had God's own word for his recovery, which she still believes, whether her son is dead or not.

The remonstrance of the Parliament of Paris, on the dissolution of that of Bretagne, is very decent; they are to have an audience next week. They do not touch on Chalotais, because the accusation against him is for treason. What do you think that treason is? A correspondence with Mr. Pitt, to whom he is made to say, that 'Rennes is nearer to London than Paris.' It is now believed that the anonymous letters, supposed to be written by Chalotais, were forged by a Jesuit—those to Mr. Pitt could not have even so good an author.

The Duke of Richmond is still at Aubigné: I wonder he stays, for it is the hardest frost alive. - Mr. Hume does not go to Ireland<sup>1</sup>; where your brother finds he would by no means be welcome. I have a notion he will stay here till your brother's return.

The Duc de Praslin, it is said, will retire at Christmas. As La Borde<sup>2</sup>, the great banker of the court, is trying to retire too, my cousin<sup>3</sup>, who is much connected with La Borde, suspects that Choiseul is not very firm himself.

I have supped with Monsieur de Maurepas, and another LETTER 1078.—<sup>1</sup> As Secretary to Lord Hertford. The Irish prejudice against the Scotch would not admit of this appointment.

<sup>2</sup> Jean Joseph (1724-1794), Marquis de Laborde.

<sup>3</sup> Hon. Thomas Walpole.

night with Marshal Richelieu : the first is extremely agreeable and sensible ; and, I am glad, not minister. The other is an old piece of tawdry, worn out, but endeavouring to brush itself up ; and put me in mind of Lord Chesterfield, for they laugh before they know what he has said—and are in the right, for I think they would not laugh afterwards.

I sent Lady Ailesbury the words and music of the prettiest opéra comique in the world. I wish I could send her the actors too. Adieu !

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

December 9.

Lord Ossory put off his journey ; which stopped this letter, and it will now go by Mr. Andrew Stuart<sup>4</sup>.

The face of things is changed here ; which I am impatient to tell you, that you may see it is truth, not system, which I pique myself on sending you. The vigour of the court has frightened the Parliaments. That of Pau has submitted. The procureurs, &c., of Rennes, who, it was said, would not plead before the new commission, were told that if they did not plead the next day they should be hanged without a trial. No bribe ever operated faster !

I heard t'other day, that some Spanish minister, I forget his name, being dead, Squillace would take his department, and Grimaldi have that of the West Indies. He is the worst that could have it, as we have no greater enemy.

The Dauphin is certainly alive, but in the most shocking way possible ; his bones worn through his skin, a great <sup>4</sup> Andrew Stuart (d. 1801), appointed Keeper of the Signet in Scotland in 1770. He was counsel for the Duke of Hamilton in the 'Douglas Cause,' and published in swelling behind, and so relaxed, that his intestines appear from that part; and yesterday the mortification was suspected.

1773 a series of Letters to Lord Mansfield, in which he commented strongly on Mansfield's partiality to Mr. Douglas, the Duke's opponent.

I have received a long letter from Lady Ailesbury, for which I give her a thousand thanks; and would answer it directly, if I had not told you every earthly thing I know. The Duke and Duchess<sup>5</sup> are, I hear, at Fontainebleau: the moment they return, I will give the Duchess Lady Ailesbury's commission.

1079. TO THE COUNTESS OF SUFFOLK.

MADAM, Paris, Dec. 5, 1765; but does not set out till the 11th.

Miss Hotham need not be in pain for what to say when she gives me an account of your Ladyship, which is all the trouble I thought of giving her. If she could make those accounts more favourable, I should be better pleased: but I know what an untractable brute the gout is, and the joy it takes in plaguing everybody that is connected with it. We have the sharpest frost here that ever lived; it has done me great good; and, if it has the same effect on your Ladyship, I hope you are starved to death.

Since Paris has begun to fill, in spite of Fontainebleau, I am much reconciled to it, and have seen several people I like. I am established in two or three societies, where I sup every night; though I have still resisted whisk, and am more constant to my old flame loo during its absence than I doubt I have been to my other passions. There is a young Comtesse d'Egmont<sup>1</sup>, daughter of Marshal Richelieu, so pretty and pleasing, that, if I thought it would break anybody's heart in England, I would be in love with her.

<sup>5</sup> Of Richmond. Walpole.

LETTER 1079.—Collated with original in British Museum.

<sup>1</sup> Sophie Jeanne Louise Armande

Septimanie de Richelieu, daughter of the Maréchal Duc de Richelieu, and wife of the Comte d'Egmont.

Nay, Madam, I might be so within all rules here; I am twenty years on the right side of red-heels, which her father wears still, and he has still a wrinkle to come before he leaves them off.

The Dauphin is still alive, but kept so only by cordials. Yet the Queen and Dauphiness have no doubt of his recovery, having the Bishop of Glandève's word for it, who got a promise from a vision under its own hand and seal. The Dauphin has certainly behaved with great courage and tranquillity, but he is so touched with the tenderness and attention of his family, that he now expresses a wish to live.

If there is no talk in England of politics and parliaments, I can send your Ladyship as much as you please from hence—or if you want English themselves, I can send you about fifty head; and I assure you we shall still be well stocked. There were three card-tables full of lords, ladies, gentlemen, and gentlewomen, the other night at Lady Berkeley's, who keeps Tuesdays. Lord Berkeley is arrived, and much improved both in his person and manner. The Duke of Buccleuch is expected next week.

The house of Richmond is gone to Aubigné for a week, as the Duchess will not have her audience till the Dauphin's fate is decided. I did not dare to accompany them at this time of year after all I have suffered.

Yesterday I dined at La Borde's, the great banker of the court. Lord! Madam, how little and poor all your houses in London will look after his! In the first place, you must have a garden half as long as the Mall, and then you must have fourteen windows, each as long as t'other half, looking into it; and each window must consist of only eight panes of looking-glass. You must have a first and second antechamber, and they must have nothing in them but dirty servants. Next must be the grand cabinet, hung with red damask, in gold frames, and covered with eight large and very bad pictures, that cost four thousand pounds—I cannot afford them you a farthing cheaper. Under these, to give an air of lightness, must be hung bas-reliefs in marble. Then there must be immense armoires of tortoise-shells and or moulu, inlaid with medals—and then you may go into the petit cabinet, and then into the great salle, and the gallery, and the billiard-room, and the eating-room; and all these must be hung with crystal lustres and looking-glass from top to bottom; and then you must stuff them fuller than they will hold with granite tables and porphyry urns, and bronzes, and statues, and vases, and the Lord or the devil knows what—but, for fear you should ruin yourself or the nation, the Duchesse de Grammont<sup>2</sup> must give you this, and Madame de Marsan that; and if you have anybody that has any taste to advise you, your eating-room must be hung with huge hunting-pieces in frames of all coloured golds, and at top of one of them you may have a setting-dog, who having sprung a wooden partridge, it may be flying a yard off against the wainscot. To warm and light this palace it must cost you eight and twenty thousand livres a year in wood and candles—if you cannot afford that, you must stay till my Lord Clive returns with the rest of the Indies. The mistress of this Arabian Nights' Entertainment is very pretty, and Sir Laurence la Borde<sup>3</sup> is so fond of her, that he sits by her at dinner, and calls her Pug, or Taw, or I forget what.

Lady Mary Chabot always charges me to mention her to your Ladyship, with particular attention. There are some to whom I could wish your Ladyship would do me the same good office; but I have been too troublesome already, and will only mention Miss Hotham, Mr. Chetwynd, Lady Blandford, and St. James's Square.

<sup>2</sup> Béatrix de Choiseul-Stainville (1730–1794), Duchesse de Grammont, sister of the Duc de Choiseul, with whom she had great influence.

<sup>3</sup> Probably an allusion to Sir Laurence Dundas, the rich English contractor.

Your Ladyship's

Most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1080. To Miss ANNE PITT.

Paris, Dec. 25, 1765.

NOTHING could have given me more pleasure than your commission, if you had left me any hopes of executing it well; but I own I do not comprehend how it is to be effected. You forbid ornaments, and tell me the room is to be hung. On these terms it is impossible to make it resemble a French room. The chimney and the panels of the doors may admit French designs: all the rest can have nothing but a bead or baguette. This is not only my idea, Madam, to which I would not trust, but Madame de Rochefort's too, to whom I carried your plan, and left it with her to consider. The proportions of your windows and doors are as un-French as possible; the former, to be like those of this country, should be much higher, and the others not near so wide. I have seen but one idea in all the houses here; the rooms are white and gold, or white; a lustre, a vast glass over the chimney, and another opposite, and generally a third over against the windows compose their rooms universally. In the bedchamber is a piece of hanging behind and on each side of the bed; the rest of the room is stark naked. Now and then there is a piece of tapestry or damask opposite to the windows; but surely there is nothing in which they so totally want imagination as in the furniture of their houses? I have seen the Hôtels de Soubise, de Luxembourg, de Maurepas, de Brancas, and several others, especially the boasted Hôtel de Richelieu, and could not perceive any difference, but in the more or less gold, more or less baubles on the chimneys and tables; and that now and then Vanloo has sprawled goddesses over the doors, and, at other times, Boucher. There is a routine for their furniture as much as for their phrases, and an exceeding want of invention in both. As to a comfortable chamber for winter, they have no more notion of it than Queen Frédégonde had. In short, their whole system of habitation is to me absurd; yet as I shall have the more merit if I can succeed in executing your commands, Madam, there is nothing I will not try, if you will be so good as to explain your intention a little farther. May the mouldings or baguettes be carved? may there be any ornament to the ceiling or cornice? may the chimney be widened, without which it can never be a French chimney, which is always very low and straddling? may the corners of the doors be rounded off, without which the panels must be square too, and then they will be English doors? All these, I doubt, are necessary demands, and at last, I fear, the proportions of the windows and doors will destroy all Gallicism. However, I will neglect nothing on my part. I have consulted Madame de Surgère too, whom you know, and who is reckoned to understand these things; she wants more information; and it will be the impracticability, not our faults, if you are not pleased, Madam.

The Dauphin's death<sup>1</sup> has stifled all diversions, but will increase mine, by bringing more people to Paris.

His whole behaviour was good nature and good sense. It was one of the few deaths (I mean of those who die in public) void of pedantry, affectation, or bigotry. It is plain he was not known, and consequently his discretion is plain. We were all admiration for four days—but now repose ourselves, with settling mourning, who ought to draper<sup>2</sup> their coaches, and how many guards the Dauphiness is to have. It is never necessary to conquer grief; let it alone, and in two days it will vent itself on a hat-band or a muslin ruffle. However, lest it should fix even there, I hear some people had the precaution to fortify themselves with diamond earrings and gold shoes as a preservative.

<sup>1</sup> On Dec. 20, 1765.

Our friend Madame de Mirepoix has made a very unfortunate campaign at Fontainebleau, and lost thirteen or fourteen hundred pounds at whisk. I am sorry for it, but with her parts, how should she play so dull a game well? The Prince de Beauvau is holding the states of Languedoc<sup>3</sup> very triumphantly, and I shall not see him before February.

Rousseau is here, protected by the Temple<sup>4</sup>, but is going to England. Considering the mischief he has done at Geneva, may not he hope to be protected by the Temple<sup>5</sup> in England too?

I am glad, Madam, that you only think you have the gout, for then I am sure you have not. It is by no means an ache in one's fancy. If you should have it, come away directly to Paris, where it is treated with the utmost respect and indulgence. Nobody laughs at one's stick; on the contrary, they give one the warmest place, and a great chair, and advise a thousand remedies, all infallible, and equally fit to cure a smoking chimney. In—about seven or eight weeks you will be quite well, and sup and sit up till two in the morning—except the nights that you go to the Luxembourg, where they keep good hours.

<sup>2</sup> i. e. to have them covered with black cloth, as a sign of mourning.

<sup>3</sup> He was Governor of Languedoc.

<sup>4</sup> The Prince de Conti, who protected Rousseau, lived in the Temple.

<sup>5</sup> Lord Temple.

Wednesday night, late.

I am just come, Madam, from the Luxembourg; the Duc de Nivernois has pronounced your plan impracticable; and we can find no way of making your room look French, but by sending it a box of rouge. However, I keep your plan till further orders. Monsieur de Nivernois has been reading us a dozen new fables, all prettier than one another—in short, you had better come and bespeak your mouldings yourself. You shall play but one rubber, you shall not eat much, and after supper we will set on your plan. It will not only be the shortest way, but I am sure the most agreeable. Adieu! Madam.

1081. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Jan. 2, 1766.

WHEN I came to Paris, Madam, I did not know that by New Year's Day I should find myself in Siberia; at least as cold. There have not been two good days together since the middle of October; however, I do not complain, as I am both well and well pleased, though I wish for a little of your sultry English weather, all French as I am. I have entirely left off dinners, and lead the life I always liked, of lying late in bed, and sitting up late. I am told of nothing but how contradictory this is to your Ladyship's orders; but as I shall have dull dinners and triste evenings enough when I return to England, all your kindness cannot persuade me to sacrifice my pleasures here, too. Many of my opinions are fantastic; perhaps this is one, that nothing produces gout like doing anything one dislikes. I believe the gout, like a near relation, always visits one when one has some other plague. Your Ladyship's dependence on the waters of Sunning Hill is, I hope, better founded; but in the meantime my system is full as pleasant.

Madame d'Aiguillon's goodness to me does not abate, nor Madame Geoffrin's. I have seen but little of Madame d'Egmont, who seems very good, and is universally in esteem. She is now in great affliction, having lost suddenly Monsieur Pignatelli, the minister at Parma, whom she bred up, and whom she and her family had generously destined for her grand-daughter, an immense heiress. It was very delicate and touching what Madame d'Egmont said to her daughter-in-law on this occasion :—'Vous voyez, ma chère, combien j'aime mes enfans d'adoption !' This daughter-in-law is delightfully pretty, and civil, and gay, and conversable, though not a regular beauty like Madame de Monaco.

The bitterness of the frost deters me, Madam, from all sights ; I console myself with good company, and still more with being absent from bad. Negative as this satisfaction is, it is incredibly great, to live in a town like this, and to be sure every day of not meeting one face one hates ! I scarce know a positive pleasure equal to it.

Your Ladyship and Lord Holland shall laugh at me as much as you please for my dread of being thought charming ; yet I shall not deny my panic, as surely nothing is so formidable as to have one's limbs on crutches and one's understanding in leading-strings. The Prince of Conti laughed at me t'other day on the same account. I was complaining to the old blind charming Madame du Deffand, that she preferred Mr. Crawford to me : 'What,' said the Prince, 'does not she love you ?' 'No, Sir,' I replied, 'she likes me no better than if she had seen me.'

Mr. Hume carries this letter and Rousseau to England. I wish the former may not repent having engaged with the latter, who contradicts and quarrels with all mankind, in order to obtain their admiration. I think both his means and his end below such a genius. If I had talents like his,

I should despise any suffrage below my own standard, and should blush to owe any part of my fame to singularities and affectations. But great parts seem like high towers erected on high mountains, the more exposed to every wind, and readier to tumble. Charles Townshend is blown round the compass; Rousseau insists that the north and south blow at the same time; and Voltaire demolishes the Bible to erect fatalism in its stead:—so compatible are the greatest abilities and greatest absurdities!

Madame d'Aiguillon gave me the enclosed letter for your Ladyship. I wish I had anything else to send you; but there are no new books, and the theatres are shut up for the Dauphin's death: who, I believe, is the greatest loss they have had since Harry IV.

I am

Your Ladyship's most faithful and obedient

Humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1082. TO LADY MARY COKE.

Paris, Jan. 4th, 1766.

I THAT am used to the rapidity of events in London, Madam, am astonished at the dearth of Paris. They have no occurrences but deaths and marriages and promotions, no revolutions, no separations, no horse races, nothing that constitutes history. For the first month after my arrival they talked of nothing but whether the Duchesse de Boufflers had the smallpox a second time or not. Then they lived nine or ten weeks upon the Dauphin's death. They eked out the mourning and ceremonies as long as they could; and Madame Geoffrin owned fairly t'other night that now there was nothing to talk of—how much less than nothing is there to write of! Why, though even my Lady Berkeley is here, one has not a word to say.

My life is perfectly French and I like it. I lie abed all the morning, breakfast, eat no dinner, visit after that no dinner, fix at nine for the evening, sup, drink coffee, and sit up till past two; if I meet Madame de Mirepoix, drink tea, and stay till later. Oh, it is charming; and what is more delightful, have no House of Commons; which, however, I hate less than usual for its late behaviour. It will be woful to return to English hours, and manners, and assemblies! Yet I am not ungrateful for the kind orders your Ladyship gave Lady Brown to send me back: yet if I could transport you and a very few more, and Strawberry, with all my cats and dogs, to Paris, and a mouthful of verdure, I should not care if I never returned again. The Duchess of Richmond is not at all of my mind, but very impatient to be at home; yet I do all I can to make her happy by carrying her to shops every day, and is there greater happiness? We were at the Palais Marchand on New Year's Eve: crowded and yet frozen to death. Nobody liked it but I, who, having no terrors of gravity before my eyes, amuse myself as foolishly as I please all day long. It is pleasant to be in a country where, being connected with nobody, nor having relation to anything, one is at liberty to choose sense or nonsense without being torn to pieces. Nobody has any interest to pity or blame one. As often as I find that I am too young to bear being old, I shall certainly whip over hither, vent my vagary, and return perfectly sober.

All this is upon the supposition that I am not frozen to death within this week. The weather is as cold as in Russia, and as here they sup with the doors open, I am forced to eat soup scalding hot to prevent being converted into an icicle. The theatres are shut up since the Dauphin's death—however, I don't hear that you divert yourselves better in England. Your operas, I am told, are woful, and Almack's not a jot livelier than it was last winter. In short, I am convinced that America will soon be the scene of all amusement; they already write libels, and laugh at your Parliament. The moment a party is formed the chiefs must divert their partisans. I wonder Lord Temple does not scramble over thither; he would have more hopes than are left him in England; but I recollect that he is unluckily on the wrong side, or we should have a new obelisk at Stowe, dedicated to some patriot of Boston. I pity the ministry when George Grenville has got a new continent opened to harangue upon. I have long thought that he should have lived in Lapland, where one day lasts for six months. Rousseau set out this morning for England. As he loves to contradict a whole nation, I suppose he will write for the present opposition. Pray tell me if he becomes the fashion. As he is to live at Fulham<sup>1</sup>, I hope his first quarrel will be with his neighbour the Bishop of London, who is an excellent subject for his ridicule.

Adieu, dear Lady Mary. You see I conceal none of my levities, but I pretend to some merit, as, let me be as fickle as I will, in one point I never alter.

Your most faithful

Humble servant,

H. W.

<sup>1</sup> Hume had arranged that Rousseau should board with a French gardener at Fulham. This lodging proved unsuitable, and Rousseau took a house belonging to a Mr. Davenport, at Wootton in Derbyshire.

1083. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Jan. 5, 1766.

THE post, my dear Sir, is as vexatious as possible, and denies me favours that even a ministry grants. I had set my heart on being the first to announce your Envoyship to you. Lord Cowper's servant, I find, used me as ill as if he was a postmaster too, slipping through Paris with Mr. Conway's letter, without calling on me, and giving me the chance of your opening mine first. Well! all this is very selfish, and I ought to be content with your having it, and knowing it anyhow.

For the riband I know not what to say, as I have not heard a syllable about it. Favours generally beget favours, for courts and fortune love faces they are used to. I will not answer in your case. It would be cheapest to me to persuade you not to care; but I see you make a sad pupil for a philosopher. I am at least so much of a philosopher, that I could never solicit a plaything for you with the same earnestness that I begged a reality. Partly you know my reasons for not caring to ask at all. Out of friendship to you, my dear Sir, I broke through all my resolutions; but without entering into them farther, ask yourself if it can be easy for me, in any light, to sue for favours, when I have even left my country, my friends, and a triumphant party, to break abruptly from all political connections? As you seemed to value the red riband, I did press for it for you with more warmth than I thought such a nonsense deserved. Consider, I was behind the scenes when my father revived that pageant; I knew it was a succedaneum to bank bills, and I was astonished when my brother<sup>1</sup> accepted it, even after it had fallen much below par. If I have any credit remaining in the bank, it will operate in your favour; that is, if any friend you have made abroad would renew the application, the memory of my request perhaps would second it. What think you of Tommy Pelham<sup>2</sup>? He used to profess much to you.

LETTER 1083.—<sup>1</sup>Sir Edward, second son of Sir Robert Walpole, was made

Knight of the Bath after his father's death. Robert, the eldest, received

I called the ministry triumphant: they are so beyond their warmest expectation. In the House of Lords, which the opposition had chosen as the field of certain victory, the ministers were fourscore to twenty-four. In the Commons the defeat was still more disgraceful. George Grenville, who on the first day opposed the Address, was forced to retract, and it passed without a negative. On the fourth and last of that brief session, though he had managed a surprise, and though there was not a minister in the House, their re-elections not being over, he was beaten by 70 to 35; a victory without generals! In short, no disgraced ministers ever fell so low and so totally as the present.

Venal and false as Parliaments are, and no Parliament ever exceeded the present in both respects, it would not account for this total abandonment of the late ministers, if universal odium did not concur. Much good may it do the Parliament, which supported them so roundly but last year! The whole party is shrunk to the Bedford faction, for Lord Temple, who has joined his brother George, seems to have carried nothing with him but the contempt of the nation. Mr. Pitt, as Milton says of the moon, remains in clouded majesty aloof; is said to favour the ministry, and is certainly hostile to the opposition. This is the summary of English politics. When the House meets on the 14th, I do not the red riband along with his father at the restitution of the Order in 1726. Walpole.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas, afterwards created Lord
Pelham. Walpole.

imagine the ministers will be less strong than before the holidays; for the thinness of both Houses indicates how many were waiting the event; and they, good folks, will hardly resort into a beaten camp. Teased no doubt the ministers will be, for Lord Temple cannot refrain from mischief, or Sandwich from tricks; and Grenville, rather than not talk, would harangue, if there were not one man in the House on his side. To silence him would require an Algerine ministry, who would begin with cutting out his tongue.

The King's youngest brother, Prince Frederick, is dead, of a dropsy and consumption: he was a pretty and promising boy. The vacant Garters are given to the Prince of Wales, the Hereditary Prince, and Lord Albemarle. The numbers of the royal family and of foreign princes connected with them who have the Garter, will make it an extraordinary curiosity on an English breast. If you obtain the red, pray don't think of exchanging it for the blue. To be serious, let your new credentials arrive and be fixed Envoy. Mitchell, I see, has got one red riband; and Draper I suppose will have the other. On a new vacancy you may get the Duke of York to renew his application for you. As he will not probably obtain many favours, they may now and then be willing to hush him with a red riband for a friend, and he will like that you should owe it to him rather than to a private person. When you are firm in your seat of Envoy, what if you wrote to his Royal Highness, that you would not trouble him on the Envoy, but hoped to be indebted to his protection for what he had so graciously engaged to undertake. This I should think would pique him, if he sees the Bath bestowed contrary to his solicitation. Consider this advice, and act as you find it reasonable or not. You are a very boy, but I cannot help humouring you a little. Good night.

P.S. I guessed right; the papers which are just come in, say that Draper<sup>s</sup> has the red riband.

1084. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, Jan. 5, 1766.

LADY BEAULIEU acts like herself, and so do you in being persuaded that nobody will feel any satisfaction that comes to you with more transport than I do. You deserve her friendship, because you are more sensible to the grace of the action than to the thing itself; of which, besides approving the sentiment, I am glad, for if my Lady Cardigan is as happy in drawing a straw<sup>1</sup>, as in picking straws, you will certainly miss your green coat. Yet methinks you would make an excellent Robin Hood reformé, with Little John your brother. How you would carol Mr. Percy's old ballads under the greenwood tree! I had rather have you in any merry Sherwood than at Greatworth, and should delight in your picture drawn as a bold forester, in a green frock, with your rosy hue, grey locks, and comely belly. In short, the favour itself, and the manner, are so agreeable, that I shall be at least as much disappointed as you can be, if it fails. One is not ashamed to wear a feather from the hand of a friend. We both scorn to ask or accept boons: but it is pleasing to have life painted with images by the pencil of friendship. Visions, you know, have always been my pasture; and so far from growing old enough to quarrel <sup>s</sup> Sir William Draper, much known by his conquest of Manilla; by his controversy with the author of the letters of Junius; and by his accusation of General Murray on the second loss of Minorca in 1782. Walpole.

LETTER 1084. —<sup>1</sup> Lady Beaulieu and Lady Cardigan (who were sisters and co-heiresses) were, apparently, to draw lots to decide which of them should have power to appoint the Deputy Ranger of Rockingham Forest. Lady Beaulieu was evidently successful, as the post was early in 1766 bestowed by her upon Montagu, to whom she had intimated her intention. (See extracts from Montagu's letters to Walpole in 8th Report of Hist. MSS. Comm., Part II, p. 118.)

with their emptiness, I almost think there is no wisdom comparable to that of exchanging what is called the realities of life for dreams. Old castles, old pictures, old histories, and the babble of old people, make one live back into centuries, that cannot disappoint one. One holds fast and surely what is past. The dead have exhausted their power of deceiving—one can trust Catherine of Medicis now. In short, you have opened a new landscape to my fancy; and my Lady Beaulieu will oblige me as much as you, if she puts the long bow into your hands. I don't know but the idea may produce some other Castle of Otranto.

The victorious arms of the present ministry in Parliament will make me protract my stay here, lest it should be thought I awaited the decision of the event—next to successful enemies, I dread triumphant friends. To be sure, Lord Temple and George Grenville are very proper to be tied to a conqueror's car, and to drag their slow length along; but it is too ridiculous to see Goody Newcastle exulting like old Marius in a seventh consulship. Don't tell it, but as far as I can calculate my own intention, I shall not set out before the twenty-fifth of March. That will meet your abode in London; and I shall get a day or two out of you for some chat at Strawberry on all I have seen and done here. For this reason I will anticipate nothing now; but bid you good morrow, after telling you a little story. The canton of Béarn<sup>2</sup> ordered all the impressions of Helvetius's Esprit and Voltaire's Pucelle to be seized. The officer of justice employed by them came into the council and said, 'Magnifiques seigneurs, après toutes les recherches possibles, on n'a pu trouver dans toute la ville que très peu de l'Esprit, et pas une Pucelle.' Adieu! Robin and John!

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

<sup>2</sup> So in MS., but Walpole probably means Berne.

Jan. 9th.

I had not sent away my letter, being so disappointed of a messenger, and now receive yours of December the thirtieth. My house is most heartily at your service, and I shall write to Favre to have it ready for you. You will see by the former part of this letter, that I do not think of being in England before the end of March. All I dislike in this contract is the fear, that if I drive you out of my house, I shall drive you out of town; and as you will find, I have not a bed to offer you but my own, and Favre's, in which your servant will lie, for I have stripped Arlington Street to furnish Strawberry. In the meantime you will be comfortable in my bed, and need have no trouble about Favre, as he lodges at his wife's while I am absent. Let them know in time to have the beds aired.

I don't understand one syllable of your paragraph about Miss Talbot, Admiral Cornish, and Mr. Hampden's son<sup>3</sup>. I thought she was married, and I forget to whom.

1085. To JOHN CHUTE.

[Jan. 8, 1766.]

It is in vain, I know, my dear Sir, to scold you, though I have such a mind to it—nay, I must. Yes; you that will not lie a night at Strawberry in autumn for fear of the gout, to stay in the country till this time, and till you caught it! I know you will tell me, it did not come till you had been two days in town. Do, and I shall have no

<sup>3</sup> 'I see by the papers that Admiral Cornish is to have a patent. I will be hanged if it is not to qualify Tyger Talbot's daughter one of these days, and, if it is so, I shall be glad, for she is a good lady. Sir Charles Sedley figures by the same tenure—but ware Mr. Hampden's son.' (Mon-tagu to Walpole, Hist. MSS. Comm., 8th Report, Part II, p. 118.) Admiral Cornish was made a baronet in Jan. 1766.

LETTER 1085.—Dated 1765 in the 4th edition of Lord Orford's Works (1798), vol. v. pp. 420-1, but obviously of 1766.

more pity for you than if I was your wife, and had wanted to come to town two months ago.

I am perfectly well, though to be sure Lapland is the torrid zone in comparison of Paris. We have had such a frost for this fortnight, that I went nine miles to dine in the country to-day, in a villa exactly like a greenhouse, except that there was no fire but in one room. We were four in a coach, and all our chinks stopped with furs, and yet all the glasses were frozen. We dined in a paved hall painted in fresco, with a fountain at one end; for in this country they live in perpetual opera, and persist in being young when they are old, and hot when they are frozen. At the end of the hall sat shivering three glorious macaws, a vast cockatoo, and two poor paroquets, who squalled like the children in the wood after their nursery fire! I am come home, and blowing my billets between every paragraph, yet can scarce move my fingers. However, I must be dressed presently, and go to the Comtesse de la Marche, who has appointed nine at night for my audience. It seems a little odd to us to be presented to a Princess of the blood at that hour—but I told you, there is not a tittle in which our manners resemble one another. I was presented to her father-in-law the Prince of Conti last Friday. In the middle of the levee entered a young woman, too plain I thought to be anything but his near relation. I was confirmed in my opinion, by seeing her, after he had talked to her, go round the circle and do the honours of it. I asked a gentleman near me if that was the Comtesse de la Marche<sup>1</sup>? He burst into a violent laughter, and then told me it was Mademoiselle Auguste, a dancer!—Now, who was in the wrong?

<sup>1</sup> Fortunée Marie d'Este (d. 1808), daughter of Francis, Duke of Modena; m. (1759) Louis François Joseph de Bourbon, Comte de la Marche, who succeeded his father as Prince de Conti in 1776, and from whom she was divorced in 1775.

I give you these samples of many scenes that have amused me, and which will be charming food at Strawberry. At the same time that I see all their ridicules, there is a douceur in the society of the women of fashion that captivates me. I like the way of life, though not lively; though the men are posts, and apt to be arrogant, and though there are twenty ingredients wanting to make the style perfect. I have totally washed my hands of their savans and philosophers, and do not even envy you Rousseau, who has all the charlatanerie of Count St. Germain<sup>2</sup> to make himself singular and talked of. I suppose Mrs. Montagu, my Lord Lyttelton, and a certain lady friend of mine<sup>3</sup>, will be in raptures with him, especially as conducted by Mr. Hume. But, however I admire his parts, neither he nor any Genius I have known has had common sense enough to balance the impertinence of their pretensions. They hate priests, but love dearly to have an altar at their feet; for which reason it is much pleasanter to read them than to know them. Adieu! my dear Sir!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

Jan. 15.

This has been writ this week, and waiting for a conveyance, and as yet has got none. Favre tells me you are recovered, but you don't tell me so yourself. I enclose a trifle that I wrote lately<sup>4</sup>, which got about and has made enormous noise in a city where they run and cackle after an event, like a parcel of hens after an accidental husk of a grape. It has made me the fashion, and made Madame de Boufflers and the Prince of Conti very angry with me:

<sup>2</sup> The Comte de St. Germain (d. 1784), an adventurer who attracted great attention in France. His real name is unknown.

<sup>3</sup> Lady Hervey.

<sup>4</sup> The letter from the King of Prussia to Rousseau. Walpole.

the former intending to be rapt to the Temple of Fame by clinging to Rousseau's Armenian robe. I am peevish that with his parts he should be such a mountebank: but what made me more peevish was, that after receiving Wilkes with the greatest civilities, he paid court to Mr. Hume by complaining of Wilkes's visit and intrusion.

Upon the whole, I would not but have come hither; for, since I am doomed to live in England, it is some comfort to have seen that the French are ten times more contemptible than we are. I am a little ungrateful; but I cannot help seeing with my eyes, though I find other people make nothing of seeing without theirs. I have endless histories to amuse you with when we meet, which shall be at the end of March. It is much more tiresome to be fashionable than unpopular; I am used to the latter, and know how to behave under it: but I cannot stand for member of Parliament of Paris. Adieu!

1086. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Saturday night, Jan. 11, 1766.

I HAVE just now, Madam, received the scissors, by General Vernon, from Mr. Conway's office. Unluckily, I had not received your Ladyship's notification of them sooner, for want of a conveyance, and I wrote to my servant to inquire of yours how they had been sent; which I fear may have added a little trouble to all you had been so good as to take, and for which I give you ten thousand thanks: but your Ladyship is so exact and friendly, that it almost discourages rather than encourages me. I cannot bring myself to think that ten thousand obligations are new letters of credit.

I have seen Mrs. F——, and her husband may be as happy as he will: I cannot help pitying him. She told me it is colder here than in England; and in truth I believe so: I blow the fire between every paragraph, and am quite cut off from all sights. The agreeableness of the evenings makes me some amends. I am just going to sup at Madame d'Aiguillon's with Madame d'Egmont, and I hope Madame de Brionne, whom I have not yet seen; but she is not very well, and it is doubtful. My last new passion, and I think the strongest, is the Duchess de Choiseul. Her face is pretty, not very pretty; her person a little model. Cheerful, modest, full of attentions, with the happiest propriety of expression, and greatest quickness of reason and judgement, you would take her for the queen of an allegory: one dreads its finishing, as much as a lover, if she would admit one, would wish it should finish. In short, Madam, though you are the last person that will believe it, France is so agreeable, and England so much the reverse, that I don't know when I shall return. The civilities, the kindnesses, the honours I receive, are so many and so great, that I am continually forced to put myself in mind how little I am entitled to them, and how many of them I owe to your Ladyship. I shall talk you to death at my return. Shall you bear to hear me tell you a thousand times over, that Madame Geoffrin is the most rational woman in the world, and Madame d'Aiguillon the most animated and most obliging? I think you will. Your Ladyship can endure the panegyric of your friends. If you should grow impatient to hear them commended, you have nothing to do but to come over. The best air in the world is that where one is pleased: Sunning waters are nothing to it. The frost is so hard, it is impossible to have the gout; and though the fountain of youth is not here, the fountain of age is, which comes to just the same thing. One is never old here, or never thought so. One makes verses as if one was but seventeen—for example:—

ON MADAME DE FORCALQUIER SPEAKING ENGLISH.

Soft sounds that steal from fair Forcalquier's lips,
Like bee that murmuring the jasmine sips!
Are these my native accents? None so sweet,
So gracious, yet my ravish'd ears did meet.
O power of beauty! thy enchanting look
Can melodize each note in Nature's book.
The roughest wrath of Russians, when they swear,
Pronounc'd by thee, flows soft as Indian air;
And dulcet breath, attemper'd by thine eyes,
Gives British prose o'er Tuscan verse the prize.

You must not look, Madam, for much meaning in these lines; they were intended only to run smoothly, and to be easily comprehended by the fair scholar who is learning our language. Still less must you show them: they are not calculated for the meridian of London, where you know I dread being represented as a shepherd. Pray let them think that I am wrapped up in Canada bills, and have all the pamphlets sent over about the Colonies and the Stamp Act.

I am very sorry for the accounts your Ladyship gives me of Lord Holland. He talks, I am told, of going to Naples: one would do a great deal for health, but I question if I could buy it at that expense. If Paris would answer his purpose, I should not wonder if he came hither; but to live with Italians must be woful, and would ipso facto make me ill. It is true I am a bad judge: I never tasted illness but the gout, which, tormenting as it is, I prefer to all other distempers: one knows the fit will end, will leave one quite well, and dispenses with the nonsense of physicians, and absurdity is more painful than pain: at least the pain of the gout never takes away my spirits, which the other does.

I have never heard from Mr. Chute this century, but am glad the gout is rather his excuse than the cause, and that it lies only in his pen. I am in too good humour to quarrel with anybody, and consequently cannot be in haste to see England, where at least one is sure of being quarrelled with. If they vex me, I will come back hither directly: and I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that your Ladyship will not blame me.

Your most faithful humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1087. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, Jan. 12, 1766.

I HAVE received your letter by General Vernon, and another, to which I have writ an answer, but was disappointed of a conveyance I expected. You shall have it with additions, by the first messenger that goes; but I cannot send it by the post, as I have spoken very freely of some persons you name, in which we agree thoroughly. These few lines are only to tell you I am not idle in writing to you.

I almost repent having come hither; for I like the way of life and many of the people so well, that I doubt I shall feel more regret at leaving Paris than I expected. It would sound vain to tell you the honours and distinctions I receive, and how much I am in fashion; yet when they come from the handsomest women in France, and the most respectable in point of character, can one help being a little proud? If I was twenty years younger, I should wish they were not quite so respectable. Madame de Brionne, whom I have never seen, and who was to have met me at supper last night at the charming Madame d'Egmont's, sent me an invitation by the latter for Wednesday next. I was engaged, and hesitated. I was told, 'Comment! savez-vous que c'est qu'elle ne feroit pas pour toute la France?' However, lest you should dread my returning a perfect old swain, I study my wrinkles, compare myself and my limbs to every plate of larks I see, and treat my understanding with at least as little mercy. Yet, do you know, my present fame is owing to a very trifling composition, but which has made incredible noise. I was one evening at Madame Geoffrin's joking on Rousseau's affectations and contradictions, and said some things that diverted them. When I came home, I put them into a letter, and showed it next day to Helvetius and the Duc de Nivernois ; who were so pleased with it, that, after telling me some faults in the language, which you may be sure there were, they encouraged me to let it be seen. As you know I willingly laugh at mountebanks, political or literary, let their talents be ever so great, I was not averse. The copies have spread like wildfire ; et me voici à la mode ! I expect the end of my reign at the end of the week with great composure. Here is the letter :—

LE ROI DE PRUSSE À MONSIEUR ROUSSEAU.

MON CHER JEAN JACQUES,

Vous avez renoncé à Genève votre patrie ; vous vous êtes fait chasser de la Suisse, pays tant vanté dans vos écrits ; la France vous a décrété. Venez donc chez moi ; j'admire vos talens ; je m'amuse de vos rêveries, qui (soit dit en passant) vous occupent trop, et trop long tems. Il faut à la fin être sage et heureux. Vous avez fait assez parler de vous par des singularités peu convenables à un véritable grand homme. Démontrez à vos ennemis que vous pouvez avoir quelquefois le sens commun : cela les fâchera, sans vous faire tort. Mes états vous offrent une retraite paisible ; je vous veux du bien, et je vous en ferai, si vous le trouvez bon. Mais si vous vous obstinez à rejeter mon secours, attendez-vous que je ne le dirai à personne. Si vous persistez à vous creuser l'esprit pour trouver de nouveaux malheurs, choisissez-les tels que vous voudrez. Je suis roi, je puis vous en procurer au gré de vos souhaits : et ce qui sûrement ne vous arrivera pas vis-à-vis de vos ennemis, je cesserai de vous persécuter quand vous cesserez de mettre votre gloire à l'être.

Votre bon ami, FRÉDÉRIC.

The Princesse de Ligne<sup>1</sup>, whose mother was an English-woman, made a good observation to me last night. She said, 'Je suis roi, je puis vous procurer des malheurs,' was plainly the stroke of an English pen. I said, then I had certainly not well imitated the character in which I wrote. You will say I am a bold man to attack both Voltaire and Rousseau. It is true; but I shoot at their heel, at their vulnerable part.

I beg your pardon for taking up your time with these trifles. The day after to-morrow we go in cavalcade with the Duchess<sup>2</sup> to her audience<sup>3</sup>; I have got my cravat and shammy shoes. Adieu!

Yours ever,
HOR. WALPOLE.

1088. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Paris, Jan. 18, 1766.

I had extreme satisfaction in receiving your letter, having been in great pain about you, and not knowing whither to direct a letter. Favre told me you had had an accident<sup>1</sup>, did not say what it was, but that you was not come to town. He received all the letters and parcels safe, for which I give you many thanks, and a thousand more for your kindness in thinking of them when you was suffering so

LETTER 1087.—<sup>1</sup> Henriette Eugénie de Béthizy, daughter of the Marquis de Mezières by Eleanor Mary Theresa Oglethorpe, sister of the well-known General Oglethorpe; m. (1729) Claude Lamoral Hyacinthe, Prince de Ligne, who died in 1755.

<sup>2</sup> Of Richmond. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> At Versailles as Ambassadress. Walpole.

LETTER 1088.—<sup>1</sup> Cole, who had been in France, met with an accident in disembarking at Dover.

much. It was a dreadful conclusion of your travels, but I trust will leave no consequences behind it. The weather is by no means favourable for a recovery, if it is as severe in England as at Paris. We have had two or three days of fog, rather than thaw, but the frost is set in again as sharp as ever. I persisted in going about to churches and convents till I thought I should have lost my nose and fingers. I have submitted at last to the season, and lie abed all the morning; but I hope in February and March to recover the time I have lost. I shall not return to England before the end of March, being determined not to hazard anything. I continue perfectly well, and few things could tempt me to risk five months more of gout.

I will certainly bring you some pastils, and have them better packed, if it is possible. You know how happy I should be if you would send me any other commission.

As you say nothing of the Eton living, I fear that prospect has failed you, which gives me great regret, as it would give me very sensible pleasure to have you fixed somewhere (and not far from me) to your ease and satisfaction.

I am glad the cathedral of Amiens answered your expectation. So has the Sainte Chapelle mine—you did not tell me what charming enamels I should find in the antechapel. I have seen another vast piece, and very fine, of the Constable Montmorenci, at the Maréchale Duchesse de Luxembourg's<sup>2</sup>.

Rousseau is gone to England with Mr. Hume. You will very probably see a letter to Rousseau, in the name of the King of Prussia, writ to laugh at his affectations. It has made excessive noise here, and I believe quite ruined the author with many of the philosophers. When I tell you I was the author, it is telling you how cheap I hold their anger. If it does not reach you, you shall see it at Strawberry, where I flatter myself I shall see you this summer, and quite well. Adieu ! dear Sir.

<sup>2</sup> Madeleine Angélique de Neufville (d. 1786), sister of the Duc de Villeroi; m. 1. Duc de Boufflers;

2. Maréchal Duc de Luxembourg, who died in 1764.

Your ever obliged and Faithful servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1089. To Miss ANNE PITT.

Paris, Jan. 19, 1766.

You did me but justice, Madam, in assuring my Lady Cardigan that I should have singular pleasure in executing her commission, but she has thrown a difficulty in the way, which I must beg she would resolve before I bespeak the commodores. She would have them ornamented with or moulu, and sent to the Custom House. That would be the direct way to lose them, for or moulu is counterband and as severely seized as my Lady Holderness's gowns<sup>1</sup>. If I did not advertise her Ladyship of this, she would have reason to blame me. If I receive a repetition or alteration of her orders, I shall have time to execute them (which I will certainly do as well as I can possibly), as I shall not return to England before the end of March.

Your commission, Madam, is in a fair way. Mariette has undertaken to get me the design of a ceiling by the best draughtsman in Paris, and I will send it the moment

LETTER 1089.—Not in C.; now printed from Hist. MSS. Comm., 13th Report, Appendix, Part III, p. 152.

<sup>1</sup> 'Lady Holderness, in Mr. Grenville's administration, had occasioned the putting the laws against contra-band goods into rigorous execution, having at one journey from Paris imported one hundred and fourteen gowns, which were seized. Her lord becoming afterwards Governor of the Cinque Ports, she carried on a smuggling intercourse at Walmer Castle, on the coast of Kent, for importing French clothes and furniture for herself.' (Horace Walpole's note in Last Journals, ed. 1859, vol. i. p. 113.)

I receive it. Baguettes are understood by every carpenter in England by the name of a bead. You may have it quite plain, or here and there broken by three carved beads, literally. The drawing of the ceiling will include everything necessary, down to the paper of the room. There is nothing particular in Madame de Mirepoix's house but the neatness of it. There is a little closet full of china and pictures, and a small library, but still in the universal style of this place, no part of which as far as I can conceive would adapt itself, Madam, to your room. You need not be in dread of true architecture. It appeared here for a moment as a mode, and consequently spread itself like wildfire into their snuff-boxes, china, and dress; for whether composed of gauze or marble, no fashion is meant to last longer than a lover—it is the form is considered, not the materials. Architecture consequently, which had resisted time and Vandals, grew mortal almost as soon as it had set its pedestal in Paris, and Corinthian capitals are gathered to their predecessors, fontanges and pantins; at least nothing à la grecque is suffered, but to adorn urns, the emblems of mortality. Their rooms were just surprised with the soupçon of a Doric fret; which is more than I should be if I was to see a knotting-bag hung on the arm of the equestrian statue of Henry IV, on the Pont Neuf.

Now I talk of fashions, alas! would you believe it, Madam, that I am the fashion? Not probably when you receive this letter; there is my comfort. An unlucky letter which I wrote in the name of the King of Prussia to Rousseau got about—and spread as if it was architecture. Everybody would have a copy; the next thing was, everybody would see the author. Thus was I dandled about, with my little legs and arms shaking like a pantin. I was hoisted to the top of the Luxembourg to a Princess of Ligne, and then down again to the Princess of Talmond<sup>2</sup>, who would see me, did not know what to say to me, and dismissed me with begging I would get her a lap-dog. I thought at last I should have a box quilted for me like Gulliver, be set upon the dressing-table of a Maid of Honour and fed with bonbons. However, I have almost weathered the storm, and trust, as there are forty or fifty English here, that some of them must take compassion on their poor countryman, and to relieve me, stand upon their heads in the snow for a wager. If, contrary to all precedent, I should exist in vogue a week longer, I will send you the first statue that is cast of me in bergamotte or biscuite porcelaine.

Here is the unfortunate letter.

LE ROI DE PRUSSE À MONSIEUR ROUSSEAU.

Mon cher Jean Jacques. Vous avez renoncé à Genève, votre patrie ; vous vous êtes fait chasser de la Suisse, pays tant vanté dans vos écrits ; la France vous a décrété ; venez donc chez moi ; j'admire vos talents, je m'amuse de vos rêveries qui (soit dit en passant) vous occupent trop, et trop long tems. Il faut à la fin être sage et heureux. Vous avez fait assez parler de vous par des singularités peu convenables à un véritable grand homme. Démontrez à vos ennemis que vous pouvez avoir quelquefois de sens commun. Cela les fâchera, sans vous faire tort. Mes états vous offrent une retraite paisible : je vous veux du bien et je vous en ferai, si vous le trouvez bon. Mais si vous vous obstinez à rejeter mon secours, attendez-vous que je ne le dirai à personne. Si vous persistez à vous creuser l'esprit, pour trouver de nouveaux malheurs, choisissez-les tels que vous voudrez ; je suis Roi, je puis vous en procurer au gré de vos souhaits : et ce qui sûrement ne vous arrivera pas vis-à-vis de vos ennemis, je cesserai de vous persécuter, quand vous cesserez de mettre votre gloire à l'être.

<sup>2</sup> Marie, daughter of Count Jablonski, who held high offices in Poland ; m. (1730) Anne Charles Frédéric de la Trémonille, Prince de

Talmond. She was related to Queen Marie Leczinski, with whom she came to France. She died in 1773.

My celebrity has not been my sole misfortune. This idle letter, stamped with the approbation of the best part of the Luxembourg, and pronounced the fashion, had the misfortune to give great offence au Temple and aux environs. But this part of the history I must not write, though I shall dare to divert you with it at my return, and it is not the least comic part of this lamentable history. Adieu ! Madam.

1090. TO THOMAS GRAY.

Paris, Jan. 25, 1766.

I AM much indebted to you for your kind letter and advice ; and though it is late to thank you for it, it is at least a stronger proof that I do not forget it. However, I am a little obstinate, as you know, on the chapter of health, and have persisted through this Siberian winter in not adding a grain to my clothes, and in going open-breasted without an under waistcoat. In short, though I like extremely to live, it must be in my own way, as long as I can : it is not youth I court, but liberty ; and I think making oneself tender is issuing a general warrant against one's own person. I suppose I shall submit to confinement when I cannot help it ; but I am indifferent enough to life not to care if it ends soon after my prison begins.

I have not delayed so long to answer your letter, from not thinking of it, or from want of matter, but from want of time. I am constantly occupied, engaged, amused, till I cannot bring a hundredth part of what I have to say into the compass of a letter. You will lose nothing by this : you know my volubility, when I am full of new subjects; and I have at least many hours of conversation for you at my return. One does not learn a whole nation in four or five months; but, for the time, few, I believe, have seen, studied, or got so much acquainted with the French as I have.

By what I said of their religious or rather irreligious opinions, you must not conclude their people of quality atheists—at least, not the men. Happily for them, poor souls! they are not capable of going so far into thinking. They assent to a great deal, because it is the fashion, and because they don't know how to contradict. They are ashamed to defend the Roman Catholic religion, because it is quite exploded; but I am convinced they believe it in their hearts. They hate the Parliaments and the philosophers, and are rejoiced that they may still idolize royalty. At present, too, they are a little triumphant: the court has shown a little spirit, and the Parliaments much less: but as the Duc de Choiseul, who is very fluttering, unsettled, and inclined to the philosophers, has made a compromise with the Parliament of Bretagne, the Parliaments might venture out again, if, as I fancy will be the case, they are not glad to drop a cause, of which they began to be a little weary of the inconveniences.

The generality of the men, and more than the generality, are dull and empty. They have taken up gravity, thinking it was philosophy and English, and so have acquired nothing in the room of their natural levity and cheerfulness. However, as their high opinion of their own country remains, for which they can no longer assign any reason, they are contemptuous and reserved, instead of being ridiculously, consequently pardonably, impertinent. I have wondered, knowing my own countrymen, that we had attained such a superiority. I wonder no longer, and have a little more respect for English heads than I had.

The women do not seem of the same country: if they are less gay than they were, they are more informed, enough to make them very conversable. I know six or seven with very superior understandings; some of them with wit, or with softness, or very good sense.

Madame Geoffrin, of whom you have heard much, is an extraordinary woman, with more common sense than I almost ever met with. Great quickness in discovering characters, penetration in going to the bottom of them, and a pencil that never fails in a likeness—seldom a favourable one. She exacts and preserves, spite of her birth and their nonsensical prejudices about nobility, great court and attention. This she acquires by a thousand little arts and offices of friendship: and by a freedom and severity, which seem to be her sole end of drawing a concourse to her; for she insists on scolding those she inveigles to her. She has little taste and less knowledge, but protects artisans and authors, and courts a few people to have the credit of serving her dependents. She was bred under the famous Madame Tencin, who advised her never to refuse any man; for, said her mistress, though nine in ten should not care a farthing for you, the tenth may live to be an useful friend. She did not adopt or reject the whole plan, but fully retained the purport of the maxim. In short, she is an epitome of empire, subsisting by rewards and punishments. Her great enemy, Madame du Deffand, was for a short time mistress of the Regent, is now very old and stone-blind, but retains all her vivacity, wit, memory, judgement, passions, and agreeableness. She goes to operas, plays, suppers, and Versailles; gives suppers twice a week; has everything new read to her; makes new songs and epigrams, ay, admirably, and remembers every one that has been made these fourscore years. She corresponds with Voltaire, dictates charming letters to him, contradicts him, is no bigot to him or anybody, and laughs both at the clergy and the philosophers. In a dispute, into which she easily falls, she is very warm, and yet scarce ever in the wrong: her judgement on every subject is as just as possible; on every point of conduct as wrong as possible: for she is all love and hatred, passionate for her friends to enthusiasm, still anxious to be loved, I don't mean by lovers, and a vehement enemy, but openly. As she can have no amusement but conversation, the least solitude and ennui are insupportable to her, and put her into the power of several worthless people, who eat her suppers when they can eat nobody's of higher rank; wink to one another and laugh at her; hate her because she has forty times more parts—and venture to hate her because she is not rich. She has an old friend whom I must mention, a Monsieur Pontdeveyle<sup>1</sup>, author of the Fat Puni, and the Complaisant, and of those pretty novels, the Comte de Cominge, the Siege of Calais, and Les Malheurs de l'Amour. Would not you expect this old man to be very agreeable? He can be so, but seldom is: yet he has another very different and very amusing talent, the art of parody, and is unique in his kind. He composes tales to the tunes of long dances: for instance, he has adapted the Regent's Daphnis and Chloe to one, and made it ten times more indecent; but is so old, and sings it so well, that it is permitted in all companies. He has succeeded still better in les caractères de la danse, to which he has adapted words that express all the characters of love. With all this he has not the least idea of cheerfulness in conversation; seldom speaks but on grave subjects, and not often on them; is a humourist, very supercilious, and wrapt up LETTER 1090.—<sup>1</sup> Antoine de Ferriol (1697–1774), Comte de Pont-de-Veyle. He wrote the two comedies, the Fat Puni and the Complaisant, but was not the author of the Comte de Cominge, a drama founded on Madame de Tencin's novel Les Malheurs de l'Amour.

in admiration of his own country, as the only judge of his merit. His air and look are cold and forbidding ; but ask him to sing, or praise his works, his eyes and smiles open and brighten up. In short, I can show him to you : the self-applauding poet in Hogarth's Rake's Progress, the second print, is so like his very features and very wig, that you would know him by it, if you came hither—for he certainly will not go to you.

Madame de Mirepoix's understanding is excellent of the useful kind, and can be so when she pleases of the agreeable kind. She has read, but seldom shows it, and has perfect taste. Her manner is cold, but very civil ; and she conceals even the blood of Lorraine, without ever forgetting it. Nobody in France knows the world better, and nobody is personally so well with the King. She is false, artful, and insinuating beyond measure when it is her interest, but indolent and a coward. She never had any passion but gaming, and always loses. For ever paying court, the sole produce of a life of art is to get money from the King to carry on a course of paying debts or contracting new ones, which she discharges as fast as she is able. She advertised devotion to get made Dame du Palais to the Queen ; and the very next day this Princess of Lorraine was seen riding backwards with Madame Pompadour in the latter's coach. When the King was stabbed, and heartily frightened, the mistress took a panic too, and consulted D'Argenson, whether she had not best make off in time. He hated her, and said, By all means. Madame de Mirepoix advised her to stay. The King recovered his spirits, D'Argenson was banished, and la Maréchale inherited part of the mistress's credit.—I must interrupt my history of illustrious women with an anecdote of Monsieur de Maurepas, with whom I am much acquainted, and who has one of the few heads which approach to good ones, and who luckily for us was disgraced, and the marine dropped, because it was his favourite object and province. He employed Pontdeveyle to make a song on the Pompadour: it was clever and bitter, and did not spare even Majesty. This was Maurepas absurd enough to sing at supper at Versailles. Banishment ensued; and lest he should ever be restored, the mistress persuaded the King that he had poisoned her predecessor Madame de Châteauroux. Maurepas is very agreeable, and exceedingly cheerful; yet I have seen a transient silent cloud when politics are talked of.

Madame de Boufflers, who was in England, is a savante, mistress of the Prince of Conti, and very desirous of being his wife. She is two women, the upper and the lower. I need not tell you that the lower is gallant, and still has pretensions. The upper is very sensible, too, and has a measured eloquence that is just and pleasing—but all is spoiled by an unrelaxed attention to applause. You would think she was always sitting for her picture to her biographer.

Madame de Rochfort is different from all the rest. Her understanding is just and delicate; with a finesse of wit that is the result of reflection. Her manner is soft and feminine, and though a savante, without any declared pretensions. She is the decent friend of Monsieur de Nivernois; for you must not believe a syllable of what you read in their novels. It requires the greatest curiosity, or the greatest habitude, to discover the smallest connection between the sexes here. No familiarity, but under the veil of friendship, is permitted, and Love's dictionary is as much prohibited, as at first sight one should think his ritual was. All you hear, and that pronounced with nonchalance, is, that Monsieur un tel has had Madame une telle.

The Duc de Nivernois has parts, and writes at the top of the mediocre, but, as Madame Geoffrin says, is manqué par tout ; guerrier manqué, ambassadeur manqué, homme d'affaires manqué, and auteur manqué—no, he is not homme de naissance manqué. He would think freely, but has some ambition of being governor to the Dauphin, and is more afraid of his wife and daughter, who are ecclesiastical fagots. The former out-chatters the Duke of Newcastle ; and the latter, Madame de Gisors, exhausts Mr. Pitt's eloquence in defence of the Archbishop of Paris. Monsieur de Nivernois lives in a small circle of dependent admirers, and Madame de Rochfort is high-priestess for a small salary of credit.

The Duchess of Choiseul, the only young one of these heroines, is not very pretty, but has fine eyes, and is a little model in waxwork, which not being allowed to speak for some time as incapable, has a hesitation and modesty, the latter of which the court has not cured, and the former of which is atoned for by the most interesting sound of voice, and forgotten in the most elegant turn and propriety of expression. Oh, it is the gentlest, amiable, civil little creature that ever came out of a fairy egg ! so just in its phrases and thoughts, so attentive and good-natured ! Everybody loves it but its husband, who prefers his own sister the Duchesse de Grammont, an Amazonian, fierce, haughty dame, who loves and hates arbitrarily, and is detested. Madame de Choiseul, passionately fond of her husband, was the martyr of this union, but at last submitted with a good grace ; has gained a little credit with him, and is still believed to idolize him. But I doubt it—she takes too much pains to profess it.

I cannot finish my list without adding a much more common character—but more complete in its kind than any of the foregoing, the Maréchale de Luxembourg. She has been very handsome, very abandoned, and very mischievous. Her beauty is gone, her lovers are gone, and she thinks the devil is coming. This dejection has softened her into being rather agreeable, for she has wit and good breeding; but you would swear, by the restlessness of her person and the horrors she cannot conceal, that she had signed the compact, and expected to be called upon in a week for the performance.

I could add many pictures, but none so remarkable. In those I send you there is not a feature bestowed gratis or exaggerated. For the beauties, of which there are a few considerable, as Mesdames de Brionne, de Monaco, et d'Egmont, they have not yet lost their characters, nor got any.

You must not attribute my intimacy with Paris to curiosity alone. An accident unlocked the doors for me. That passe-partout called the fashion, has made them fly open—and what do you think was that fashion?—I myself.—Yes, like Queen Eleanor in the ballad, I sunk at Charing Cross, and have risen in the Faubourg St. Germain. A plaisanterie on Rousseau, whose arrival here in his way to you brought me acquainted with many anecdotes conformable to the idea I had conceived of him, got about, was liked much more than it deserved, spread like wildfire, and made me the subject of conversation. Rousseau's devotees were offended. Madame de Boufflers, with a tone of sentiment, and the accents of lamenting humanity, abused me heartily, and then complained to myself with the utmost softness. I acted contrition, but had like to have spoiled all, by growing dreadfully tired of a second lecture from the Prince of Conti, who took up the ball, and made himself the hero of a history wherein he had nothing to do. I listened, did not understand half he said (nor he neither), forgot the rest, said Yes when I should have said No, yawned when I should have smiled, and was very penitent when I should have rejoiced at my pardon. Madame de Boufflers was more distressed, for he owned twenty times more than I had said: she frowned, and made him signs; but she had wound up his clack, and there was no stopping it. The moment she grew angry, the lord of the house grew charmed, and it has been my fault if I am not at the head of a numerous sect:—but, when I left a triumphant party in England, I did not come here to be at the head of a fashion. However, I have been sent for about like an African prince, or a learned canary-bird, and was, in particular, carried by force to the Princess of Talmond, the Queen's cousin, who lives in a charitable apartment in the Luxembourg, and was sitting on a small bed hung with saints and Sobieskis, in a corner of one of those vast chambers, by two blinking tapers. I stumbled over a cat, a footstool, and a chamber-pot in my journey to her presence. She could not find a syllable to say to me, and the visit ended with her begging a lap-dog. Thank the Lord! though this is the first month, it is the last week of my reign; and I shall resign my crown with great satisfaction to a bouillie of chestnuts, which is just invented, and whose annals will be illustrated by so many indigestions, that Paris will not want anything else these three weeks. I will enclose the fatal letter<sup>2</sup> after I have finished this enormous one; to which I will only add, that nothing has interrupted my Sévigné researches but the frost. The Abbé de Malesherbes has given me full power to ransack Livry. I did not tell you, that by great accident, when I thought on nothing less, I stumbled on an original picture of the Comte de Grammont. Adieu! You are generally in London in March; I shall be there by the end of it.

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

<sup>2</sup> The letter from the King of Prussia to Rousseau. Walpole.—

Printed in letter to Conway of Jan. 12, 1766.

1090*. To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SELWYN.

Paris, Jan. 31, 1766.

I go step by step with the British Ambassador. He has achieved the payment of the Canada bills: I have obtained leave from Madame Geoffrin for you to have a copy of her picture. His Excellence has not demolished Dunkirk, but has made great progress towards it: I have not found Mrs. St. John, but have found out that there are two—indeed I believe neither is the right. You must send me ampler instructions. There is an ancient Demoiselle St. Jean who lived with Marivaux, and is above fourscore. They tell me that if she is not the right, I shall frighten her out of her remaining senses, and that she will talk all her acquaintance out of theirs on a subject she will not comprehend. Mr. Foley knows a Mr. and Mrs. St. John, but says it cannot be they. In short, I conclude yours is some old rag of the court of St. Germain's. Describe exactly where she sits by the waters of Babylon, crying afresh for the Pretender, and I will try to find her.

Apropos, do you know that the daughter of Madame de Peyre, who inhabits the Rochers<sup>1</sup>, is banished on the troubles of Bretagne?

I made your compliments to Madame de Bentheim. I wish you would make mine to Monsieur de Guerchy, and say I hope he received the letter of condolence that I writ to him on the Dauphin's death, and that Madame de Guerchy has received the coal-boxes from Lord Barrington. I wrote to the latter, too, and should be sorry he did not receive my letter, but I suspect that letters sent by the post LETTER 1090*.—Not in C.; reprinted from Jesse's Memoirs of the Life and Reign of George III, vol. i.

p. 599.

<sup>1</sup> The former residence of Madame de Sévigné.

do not always arrive. As I am so punctual about your commissions, I trust you will be a little so about mine.

The French are full of the Duke of York's duel, which arriving when they had nothing else to talk of, has gained entire credit. We tell them it is not true, but they think us discreet. If I regretted England ever so much, I could console myself by the exact resemblances that I find here to the most agreeable of my country folks. The Prince of Conti has all the fluent eloquence of the Prince I have mentioned. The Duchess of Nivernois makes amends for the instructive prattle of the Duke of Newcastle. The Princess of Ligne is the very image of Mrs. Askew; and Monsieur de Maurepas makes one think poor dear Lord Hardwicke still alive. The Chevalier de Courte came into the room one night, and I took him for my brother Cholmondeley. Madame de Coislin, except that her eyebrows are black, is as like an old Miss Bowyer that you remember. Nothing that I ever saw anywhere was like the Duchess of Choiseul, who has more parts, reason, and agreeableness, than I ever met in such a delicate little figure. As my curiosity is very active, I have almost seen everybody; but there are still two personages here that I am very impatient to see, Count Gage and Lady Mary Powis<sup>2</sup>, who after meeting in the Asturian mines, have met

<sup>2</sup> Lady Mary Herbert (not Powis). She was apparently married to Gage. Horace Walpole gives the following account of Lady Mary in a note originally written in an edition of Pope in his possession (these notes were printed in 1876 from the MS. in possession of Sir William Fraser):—
'Lady Mary Herbert, sister of the last Marquis of Powis, had made a prodigious fortune in the Mississippi, and refused the Duke of Bouillon, being determined to marry nobody but a sovereign prince; but refusing to realize, lost the whole, and met Gage in the Asturian mines. Some years after, the young Pretender being at Madrid, she sent to desire to see him. He found her in a garret, so poor that she could not rise for want of clothes; he gave her his great-coat, and what money he had about him. In 1766, when I was at Paris, she and Gage were both alive at Paris; he died in May that year. She was in a lodging given to her by the Prince of Conti at the Temple, and in April of the same year recovered two annuities from the Earl of Powis, by a sentence of the House of Lords.'

again at Paris. The latter is maintained by the Prince of Conti. I shall inquire after her to-night, as I sup at the Temple. They are now acting a comic opera, called Tom Jones; I have not seen it, but it is commended. Mr. A. A. is arrived here on his way to the court of Munich; General Vernon on his way I don't know whither. I hope some of the English, who are here in plenty, will carry you over the new head-dress of the men, which is exactly in a sugar-loaf shape, and very little lower. As the mourning checks their fancy in clothes, it is broken out on the tops of their heads. Adieu! my dear Sir, I can talk to you of nothing English, for I hear nothing but of your politics, about which I do not care a straw.

Yours ever,
H. W.

1091. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, Feb. 3, 1766.

I HAD the honour of writing to your Ladyship on the 4th and 12th of last month, which I only mention, because the latter went by the post, which I have found is not always a safe conveyance.

I am sorry to inform you, Madam, that you will not see Madame Geoffrin this year, as she goes to Poland in May. The King<sup>1</sup> has invited her, promised her an apartment exactly in her own way, and that she shall see nobody but whom she chooses to see. This will not surprise you, Madam; but what I shall add, will; though I must beg your Ladyship not to mention it even to her, as it is an absolute secret here, as she does not know that I know it, and as it was trusted to me by a friend of yours. In short,

LETTER 1091. — <sup>1</sup> Stanislaus II (Poniatowski), who, before his election to the throne, had been liberated by Madame Geoffrin from a debtors' prison in Paris.

there are thoughts of sending her with a public character, or at least with a commission from hence—a very extraordinary honour, and I think never bestowed but on the Maréchale de Guébriant. As the Dussons have been talked of, and as Madame Geoffrin has enemies, its being known might make her uneasy that it was known. I should have told it to no mortal but your Ladyship; but I could not resist giving you such a pleasure. In your answer, Madam, I need not warn you not to specify what I have told you.

My favour here continues; and favour never displeases. To me, too, it is a novelty, and I naturally love curiosities. However, I must be looking towards home, and have perhaps only been treasuring up regret. At worst I have filled my mind with a new set of ideas; some resource to a man who was heartily tired of his old ones. When I tell your Ladyship that I play at whisk, and bear even French music, you will not wonder at any change in me. Yet I am far from pretending to like everybody, or everything I see. There are some chapters on which I still fear we shall not agree; but I will do your Ladyship the justice to own, that you have never said a syllable too much in behalf of the friends to whom you was so good as to recommend me. Madame d'Egmont, whom I have mentioned but little, is one of the best women in the world, and, though not at all striking at first, gains upon one much. Colonel Gordon, with this letter, brings you, Madam, some more seeds from her. I have a box of pomatums for you from Madame de Boufflers, which shall go by the next conveyance that offers. As he waits for my parcel, I can only repeat how much I am

Your Ladyship's most obliged and faithful humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1092. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, Feb. 4, 1766.

I WRITE on small paper, that the nothing I have to say may look like a letter. Paris, that supplies me with diversion, affords me no news. England sends me none, on which I care to talk by the post. All seems in confusion—but I have done with politics!

The marriage of your cousins<sup>1</sup> puts me in mind of the two owls, whom the Vizier in some eastern tale told the Sultan were treating on a match between their children, on whom they were to settle I don't know how many ruined villages. Trouble not your head about it. Our ancestors were rogues, and so will our posterity be.

Madame Roland has sent to me, by Lady Jernegan<sup>2</sup>, to beg my works. She shall certainly have them when I return to England; but how comes she to forget that you and I are friends? or does she think that all Englishmen quarrel on party? If she does, methinks she is a good deal in the right; and it is one of the reasons why I have bid adieu to politics, that I may not be expected to love those I hate, and hate those I love.

I supped last night with the Duchess de Choiseul, and saw a magnificent robe she is to wear to-day for a great wedding between a Biron<sup>3</sup> and a Boufflers. It is of blue satin, embroidered all over in a mosaic, diamond-wise, with gold: in every diamond is a silver star edged with gold, and surrounded with spangles in the same way; it is trimmed with double sables, crossed with frogs and tassels LETTER 1092. —<sup>1</sup> Lord Hinchinbrooke and Lady Elizabeth Montagu.

<sup>2</sup> Mary (d. 1785), eldest daughter of Francis Plowden, of Plowden, Shropshire; m. Sir George Jerningham, fifth Baronet, of Cossey, Norfolk.

<sup>3</sup> Armand Louis de Gontaut (1747–1793), Duc de Lauzun, nephew of the Duc de Biron, whom he succeeded in 1788. He married Amélie, daughter and heiress of the Duc de Boufflers.

of gold ; her head, neck, breast, and arms, covered with diamonds. She will be quite the fairy queen, for it is the prettiest little reasonable amiable Titania you ever saw—but Oberon<sup>4</sup> does not love it. He prefers a great mortal Hermione, his sister<sup>5</sup>.

I long to hear that you are lodged in Arlington Street, and invested with your green livery : and I love Lord Beaulieu for his cudom. Adieu !

Yours ever,
H. W.

1093. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Feb. 9, 1766.

I CONGRATULATE the success of your labours<sup>1</sup> as a minister, though as an Englishman I am very indifferent about the matter. It is below such a nation as England to trouble its head whether an old mumper at Rome calls a wretched fugitive Rè d'Inghilterra or Principe di Galles. For the poor lad's followers it is important, and anything is lucky for them that prevents their going to Tyburn for him. To himself, indeed, it is cruel to be refused an empty title by an old dervish for whom he lost the reality. Rome is the only spot on earth where he can exist decently, as at least he would take the pas of many saints. To call him Prince of Wales, and refuse him the kingship, is an absurdity worthy of an Irish patriarch. Here they assign many reasons for the refusal, as the jealousy of those fools the Roman nobility ; apprehensions that the English would not go to Rome ; as if they had never gone there in the father's time ! tenderness to the Catholics in England, who are actually disturbed there by the Bishop of London, which his court, interposed to prevent the Pope from acknowledging the eldest son of the late Chevalier de St. George as King of England. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> The Duc de Choiseul.

<sup>5</sup> The Duchesse de Grammont.

LETTER 1093.—<sup>1</sup> This relates to Sir Horace Mann's having, by order of

they were not in the old Pretender's time, who was acknowledged; other fears, from the rashness and drunkenness of the young man's character; doubts on his faith, the best reason of all; and suspicions (the worst reason of all) that we have bribed the congregation of cardinals. I should be very indignant at the latter reason; but the rapacity of English members of Parliament reassures me: we have no money left to purchase the Holy Ghost, who would live upon tares, if it had no other provision than what could be spared from the Houses of Lords and Commons.

There are rumours here of a coolness, even of quarrels, between this court and the new Emperor<sup>2</sup>, who it is said insists that Parma should be held as a fief of the empire, and demands restitution of Lorraine. It would not surprise me: France, as England has done, will find that the court of Vienna obeys no law, observes no tie, but that of pride. As England and France are the two powers that can hurt one another the most, I wish them for ever connected. If this young German Cæsar begins already, I know where he will end—at impatience to reign over his mother's estates.

We are every day impatient for letters from England, where Mr. Pitt's conduct has occasioned great confusion. He has declared a little for some part of the administration, but strongly against the Duke of Newcastle; violently against Lord Bute; peremptorily against the last ministry, every one of whose acts he condemns; and, what is stronger than all, against the Parliament itself, which he says has taxed America without a right to do so, and by that act broke the original compact. His followers are exceedingly few; yet his name makes a sort of party, and you may be sure he has all the Americans with him. Lord Bute acts separately, as a fourth party—if he is allowed to do so, what becomes of the faith pledged to the present ministers, when they were invited and entreated to take the lead? If he should join the late opposition, and they join him, how that bargain will complete the scandalous characters of both sides!—of theirs to stoop to him again; of his who brings back, from self-interest, to his master those who stigmatized the mother by Act of Parliament! How justly he will deserve the title he assumes, of the King's friend! and who will not recollect the North Briton, No. 45?

<sup>2</sup> Joseph II.

Your old friend, Lord Fane<sup>3</sup>, is dead, and has left three thousand pounds a year to poor Lady Sandwich<sup>4</sup>, who cannot enjoy it. She is shut up: the family blood and her misfortunes have turned her head. I do not doubt but Sandwich will find means to profit by her unhappy situation.

Pray mention to Sir James Macdonald that I have writ to thank him for his letter, and hope he has received mine.

We are again up to the ears in snow, yet I am robust and well, am become très French, never dine, but sup, sit up all night, and lie abed all day. In short, heartily enjoy the holidays I have given myself from Parliament. However, I think of returning home at the end of March, but have some suspicion that I shall now and then steal a winter here.

If my philosophy about the red riband does not convince you, at least you must not wonder that your want of philosophy does not persuade me; though, if it was in my power to bestow, I should certainly humour you with it. Your victorious campaign against the house of Stuart adds a new title to your pretensions. If a change should happen in England, I do not think that you would obtain it, after being in favour with the present ministers. The present reign cannot but be stormy, while there is a favourite, who is too notorious a coward to venture his person, too ambitious and too treacherous to suffer anybody long who will not be his creatures. Should George Grenville return to power, I should at least be comforted to see equal ambition, equal pride, and equal treachery, bow to an idol he has abandoned, despised, and insulted. Adieu !

<sup>3</sup> Charles, Viscount Fane; he had been minister at Florence before Sir Horace Mann. Walpole.

<sup>4</sup> Lady Sandwich was second sister of Lord Fane. Walpole.

1094. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, Sunday, Feb. 23.

I CANNOT know that you are in my house, and not say, you are welcome. Indeed you are, and I am heartily glad you are pleased there. I have neither matter nor time for more, as I have heard of an opportunity of sending this away immediately with some other letters. News do not happen here as in London ; the Parliaments meet, draw up a remonstrance, ask a day for presenting it, have the day named a week after, and so forth. At their rate of going on, if Methusalem was first president, he would not see the end of a single question. As your histories are somewhat more precipitate, I wait for their coming to some settlement, and then will return—but, if the old ministers are to be replaced, Bastile for Bastile, I think I had rather stay where I am. I am not half so much afraid of any power, as the French are of Mr. Pitt. Adieu !

Yours most faithfully,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1095. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Paris, Feb. 28, 1766.

As you cannot, I believe, get a copy of the letter to Rousseau, and are impatient for it, I send it you, though the brevity of it will not answer your expectation. It is no answer to any of his works, and is only a laugh at his affectations. I hear he does not succeed in England, where singularities are no curiosity. Yet he must stay there, or give up all his pretensions. To quit a country where he may live at ease and unpersecuted, will be owning that tranquillity is not what he seeks. If he again seeks persecution, who will pity him? I should think even bigots would let him alone, out of contempt.

I have executed your commission in a way that I hope will please you. As you tell me you have a blue cup and saucer, and a red one, and would have them completed to six, without being all alike, I have bought one other blue, one other red, and two sprigged, in the same manner, with colours; so you will have just three pair, which seems preferable to six odd ones, and which, indeed, at nineteen livres apiece, I think I could not have found.

I shall keep pretty near to the time I proposed returning, though I am a little tempted to wait for the appearance of leaves. As I may never come hither again, I am disposed to see a little of their villas and gardens, though it will vex me to lose spring and lilac-tide at Strawberry. The weather has been so bad, and continues so cold, that I have not yet seen all I intend in Paris. To-day I have been to the Plaine de Sablon, by the Bois de Boulogne, to see a horse-race, rid in person by Count Lauragais and Lord Forbes<sup>1</sup>. All Paris was in motion by nine o'clock this morning, and the coaches and crowds were innumerable at so novel a sight. Would you believe it, that there was an Englishman to whom it was quite as new? That Englishman was I. Though I live within two miles of Hounslow, have been fifty times in my life at Newmarket, and have passed through it at the time of the races, I never before saw a complete one. I once went from Cambridge on purpose, saw the beginning, was tired, and went away. If there was to be a review in Lapland, perhaps I might see a review too, which yet I have never seen. Lauragais was distanced at the second circuit. What added to the singularity was, that at the same instant his brother was gone to church to be married; but, as Lauragais is at variance with his father and wife, he chose this expedient to show he was not at the wedding.

LETTER 1095.—<sup>1</sup> James Forbes (d. 1804), sixteenth Baron Forbes.

Adieu, dear Sir.

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE<sup>2</sup>.

1096. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, Feb. 29, 1766.

I HAVE received your letters very regularly, and though I have not sent you near so many, yet I have not been wanting to our correspondence, when I have had anything particular to say, or knew what to say. The Duke of Richmond has been gone to England this fortnight; he had a great deal of business, besides engagements here; and if he has failed writing, at least I believe he received yours. Mr. Conway, I suppose, has received them too, but not to my knowledge; for I have received but one from him this age. He has had something else to do than to think of Pretenders, and pretenders to pretensions. It has been a question (and a question scarcely decided yet) not only whether he and his friends should remain ministers, but whether we should not draw the sword on our colonies, and provoke them and the manufacturers at home to rebellion. The goodness of Providence, or Fortune by its permission, has interposed, and I hope prevented blood; though George Grenville and the Duke of Bedford, who so mercifully checked our victories, in compassion to France, grew heroes the moment there was an opportunity of conquering our own brethren. It was actually moved by them and their banditti to send troops to America. The stout Earl of Bute, who is never afraid when not personally in danger, joined his troops to his ancient friends, late foes, and now new allies. Yet this second race of Spaniards, so fond of gold and thirsting after American blood, were routed by 274; their whole force amounting but to 134. The Earl, astonished at this defeat, had recourse to that kind of policy which Machiavel recommends in his chapter of back-stairs. Cæsar<sup>1</sup> himself disavowed his ministers, and declared he had not been for the repeal<sup>2</sup>, and that his servants had used his name without his permission. A paper was produced to his eyes, which proved this denial an equivocation. The ministers, instead of tossing their places into the middle of the closet, as I should have done, had the courage and virtue to stand firm, and save both Europe and America from destruction.

<sup>2</sup> The letter to Rousseau follows here in the MS.

At that instant, who do you think presented himself as Lord Bute's guardian angel? only one of his bitterest enemies: a milk-white angel, white even to his eyes and eyelashes, very purblind, and whose tongue runs like LETTER 1096.—<sup>1</sup> George III.

<sup>2</sup> The repeal of the Stamp Act. George III informed Lord Strange that he was not in favour of it. 'So extraordinary a tale soon reached the ear of Lord Rockingham, who immediately asked Lord Strange if it was true what the King was reported to have said to him? The other confirmed it. On that, Lord Rockingham desired the other to meet him at court, when they both went into the closet together. Lord Strange began, and repeated the King's words; and asked if he had been mistaken? The King said, "No." Lord Rockingham then pulled out a paper, and begged to know, if on such a day (which was minuted down on the paper) his Majesty had not determined for the repeal? Lord Rockingham then stopped. The King replied, "My Lord, this is but half"; and taking out a pencil, wrote on the bottom of Lord Rockingham's paper words to this effect: "The question asked me by my ministers, was, whether I was for enforcing the Act by the sword, or for the repeal? Of the two extremes I was for the repeal; but most certainly preferred modification to either." (Memoirs of George III, ed. 1894, vol. ii. p. 205.)

a fiddlestick. You have seen this divinity<sup>3</sup>, and have prayed to it for a riband. Well, this god of love became the god of politics, and contrived meetings between Bute, Grenville, and Bedford; but, what happens to highwaymen after a robbery, happened to them before; they quarrelled about the division of the plunder, before they had made the capture—and thus, when the last letters came away, the repeal was likely to pass in both Houses, and tyranny once more despairs.

This is the quintessence of the present situation in England. To how many North Britons, No. 45, will that wretched Scot furnish matter? But let us talk of your Cardinal Duke of York: so his folly has left his brother in a worse situation than he took him up! York seems a title fated to sit on silly heads—or don't let us talk of him; he is not worth it.

I am as sorry for the death of Lady Hillsborough<sup>4</sup>, as I suppose Mr. Skreene is glad of his consort's departure. She was a common creature, bestowed on the public by Lord Sandwich. Lady Hillsborough had sense and merit, and is a great loss to her family. By letters hither, we hear miserable accounts of poor Sir James Macdonald; pray let him know that I have written to him, and how much I am concerned for his situation.

This court is plunged into another deep mourning for the death of old Stanislaus<sup>5</sup>, who fell into the fire; it caught his night-gown and burnt him terribly before he got assistance. His subjects are in despair, for he was a model of goodness and humanity; uniting, or rather creating, generosity from economy. The Poles had not the sense to re-elect him, after his virtues were proved, they who

<sup>3</sup> The Duke of York.

<sup>4</sup> Lady Mary Fitzgerald, daughter of the Earl of Kildare, and first wife of Wills Hill, first Earl of Hillsborough. Walpole.

<sup>5</sup> Ex-King of Poland, and father of the wife of Louis XV.

had chosen him before they knew him. I am told such was the old man's affection for his country, and persuasion that he ought to do all the good he could, that he would have gone to Poland if they had offered him the crown. He has left six hundred thousand livres, and a rente viagère of forty thousand crowns to the Queen, saved from the sale of his Polish estates, from his pension of two millions, and from his own liberality. His buildings, his employment of the poor, his magnificence, and his economy, were constant topics of admiration. Not only the court-tables were regularly and nobly served, but he treated, and defrayed his old enemy's<sup>6</sup> grand-daughter, the Princess Christina<sup>7</sup>, on her journey hither to see her sister the Dauphiness. When Mesdames his grand-daughters made him an unexpected visit, he was so disturbed for fear it should derange his finances, which he thought were not in advance, that he shut himself up for an hour with his treasurer, to find resources; was charmed to know he should not run in debt, and entertained them magnificently. His end was calm and gay, like his life, though he suffered terribly, and he said so extraordinary a life could not finish in a common way. To a lady who had set her ruffle on fire, and scorched her arm about the same time, he said, 'Madame, nous brûlons du même feu.' The poor Queen had sent him the very night-gown that occasioned his death: he wrote to her, 'C'étoit pour me tenir chaud, mais il m'a tenu trop chaud.'

Yesterday we had the funeral oration on the Dauphin; and are soon to have one on Stanislaus. It is a noble subject; but if I had leisure, I would compose a grand funeral oration on the number of princes dead within these six months. What fine pictures, contrasts, and comparisons they would furnish! The Duke of Parma and the King of Denmark reigning virtuously with absolute power! The Emperor at the head of Europe, and encompassed with mimic Roman eagles, tied to the apron-strings of a bigoted and jealous virago. The Dauphin cultivating virtues under the shade of so bright a crown, and shining only at the moment that he was snatched from the prospect of empire. The old Pretender wasting away in obscurity and misfortune, after surviving the Duke of Cumberland, who had given the last blow to the hopes of his family; and Stanislaus perishing by an accident,—he who had swam over the billows raised by Peter the Great and Charles XII, and reigning, while his successor and second of his name was reigning on his throne. It is not taking from the funereal part to add, that when so many good princes die, the Czarina is still living!

<sup>6</sup> Augustus II, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland. Walpole.

<sup>7</sup> Maria Christina, daughter of Frederick Augustus II, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland. In 1778 she became Abbess of the Convent of Remiremont.

The public again thinks itself on the eve of a war, by the recall of Stahremberg, the Imperial minister. It seems at least to destroy the expectation of a match between the youngest Archduchess<sup>8</sup> and the Dauphin, which it was thought Stahremberg remained here to bring about. I like your Great Duke for feeling the loss of his minister. It is seldom that a young sovereign misses a governor before he tastes the fruits of his own incapacity.

March 1st.

We have got more letters from England, where the ministers are still triumphant. They had a majority of 108 on the day that it was voted to bring in a bill to repeal the Stamp Act. George Grenville's ignorance and blunders were displayed to his face and to the whole world; he was hissed through the Court of Requests, where Mr.

<sup>8</sup> The Archduchess Marie Antoinette, married to the Dauphin (afterwards Louis XVI) in 1770; guillotined on Oct. 14, 1793.

Conway was huzza'd. It went still farther for Mr. Pitt, whom the mob accompanied home with 'Io Pitts!' This is new for an opposition to be so unpopular. Adieu!

1097. TO MISS ANNE PITT.

Paris, March 1, 1766.

At last, Madam, I have the honour of sending you the design of a ceiling, which you would have received much sooner if the person who drew it had not been very ill. I enclose Monsieur Mariette's letter as a pièce justificative, which will prove to you, Madam, that I had teased him with my impatience.

The design I think very beautiful; it is in the newest style, and taken in some measure, as everything here is now, from the oldest style, that is the antique. It may be executed either in stucco, colours, or chiaroscuro, and fills only the cove, leaving the ceiling, as you ordered, vacant except the small rose in the middle. The directions accompany it.

Your late silence, Madam, though not like my impatience, makes me fear you have thought me dilatory. I trust I shall now stand excused. Am I to order, or forbear ordering my Lady Cardigan's commodes? I hope neither you nor she blame my caution. I could not help stating a difficulty which I had experienced myself, and which has prevented my making some purchases to which I had great inclination. Whatever commands you may have for me, let me beg to know them soon; I am thinking of my return, and propose it for the end of this month or beginning of the next.

We are occupied here (with due deference and distance) as you, all you, generally are in England ; that is with the Parliament and a horse-race. On the first subject, the Parliament had won the last heat, and jockeyed the commission in Bretagne<sup>1</sup>; but two nights ago the King knocked up three grooms à mortier in the middle of the night, and it is said some of those gentlemen of the turf will be distanced. The latter article makes full as much noise. Lord Forbes and Count Lauragais rode a race on the Plaine de Sablon ; all Paris was present. The latter's horse was ill, died that night, was opened, and proves to have been poisoned. You cannot imagine the noise this makes. We are treated as if we were Russians, assassins, subjects and disciples of the Czarina. It is in vain that I assure them that poison is the only trick I never heard allowed of at Newmarket, and that a man would forfeit his honour who should practise any cheat that is not according to the known rules. The truth, I believe, is that national honour interfered, and that an English groom belonging to Lauragais himself, or to Lord Forbes (for I scorn to clear a difficulty without starting a greater), committed the fact, that the four-footed champion of his country might be sure of the victory. In the meantime the spirit of racing has taken root, and petits palefreniers will be substituted to petits maîtres. As Monsieur de Lauragais, who has introduced this system of English policy, is now amongst you, I hope he will bring back the true code, the unwritten law, dictated in those wise and virtuous ages, when the legislators themselves could not write. If Mr. Hume means to preserve his renown here, he must return in a white satin waistcoat, black cap, nankin breeches, and tight boots.

<sup>1</sup> The Parliament of Brittany had been dissolved, and a commission of sixty members appointed in its stead.

1098. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, March 8, 1766.

I WRITE because I ought, and because I have promised you I would, and because I have an opportunity by Monsieur de Lillebonne, and in spite of a better reason for being silent, which is, that I have nothing to say. People marry, die, and are promoted here, about whom neither you nor I care a straw. No, truly, and I am heartily tired of them, as you may believe, when I am preparing to return. There is a man in next room actually nailing my boxes: yet it will be the beginning of April before I am at home. I have not had so much as a cold in all this Siberian winter, and I will not venture tempting the gout by lying in a bad inn, till the weather is warmer. I wish, too, to see a few leaves out at Versailles, &c. If I stayed till August I could not see many; for there is not a tree twenty miles round, that is not hacked and hewed, till it looks like the stumps that beggars thrust into coaches to excite charity and mis-carriages.

I am going this evening in search of Madame Roland; I doubt we shall both miss each other's lilies and roses: she may have got some peonies in their room, but mine are replaced with crocuses.

I love Lord Harcourt for his civility to you; and I would fain see you situated under the greenwood-tree, even by a compromise.

You may imagine I am pleased with the defeat, hisses, and mortification of George Grenville, and the more by the disappointment it has occasioned here. If you have a mind to vex them thoroughly, you must make Mr. Pitt

LETTER 1098.—Addressed:

'To George Montagu, Esq.,
Chez moi.'

minister—they have not forgot him, whatever we have done.

The King has suddenly been here this morning to hold a lit de justice: I don't yet know the particulars, except that it was occasioned by some bold remonstrances of the Parliament on the subject of that of Bretagne. Louis told me when I waked, that the Duke de Chevreuil, the Governor of Paris, was just gone by in great state.

I long to chat with Mr. Chute and you in the blue room at Strawberry: though I have little to write, I have a great deal to say. How do you like his new house? Has he no gout? Are your cousins Cortez and Pizarro heartily mortified that they are not to roast and plunder the Americans? Is Goody Carlisle disappointed at not being appointed Grand Inquisitor? Adieu! I will not seal this till I have seen or missed Madame Roland.

Yours ever,

H. W.

P.S. I have been prevented going to Madame Roland, and must defer giving an account of her by this letter<sup>1</sup>.

1099. TO LADY MARY COKE.

Paris, March 3, 1766.

I AM thoroughly concerned, dear Madam, at the account you give me of your health. If you would attend to advice on that subject, I would tell you that you harass both your mind and body. You have not been quite well a great while, and yet never take care of yourself for two

<sup>1</sup> Attached to this letter is the following, in Horace Walpole's handwriting:—

'French epigram on Louis XV holding a lit de justice:

Sçais-tu ce qu'on dit?

Dame Justice est offensée;

Le Roi l'a trouvée dans son lit,
Et l'a violée.'

LETTER 1099. — Not in C.; reprinted from Letters and Journals of Lady Mary Coke, vol. iii. pp. xx-xxi.

days together. I would recommend to you to love your friends less, and to laugh at your enemies. The goodness of your heart makes you too attentive to both. For the dethroned Empress, who you tell me has been wanting in regard to you, she is surely below your notice. Rage, passion, and disappointment dictate all her actions, though she flatters herself that Art influences most of them. Take care of yourself, and be sure not to have the jaundice, which is the only thing in which you can ever resemble her.

You do me too much honour by far, in thinking that publicly or privately I could do any good. I did not leave England till I found I could not. I pressed what you wished, but was not listened to. When I return, which will be the end of this month, or the beginning of the next, it will most certainly not be to meddle with politics, of which I washed my hands for ever when I came away. Your nephews<sup>1</sup>, Madam, and Dr. Smith<sup>2</sup> are coming into the Hôtel I inhabit. You may imagine that their ages and mine do not mate as very proper companions; but, as far as I can judge, you will have uncommon satisfaction in them. There is a natural modesty, good nature, and good breeding in them, which is particularly amiable in young men of their great rank. If their hearts are not like yours, I am much deceived. Lord and Lady Fife are gone to Holland, and fewer English than usual remain here. The King has been suddenly and unexpectedly at the Parliament to-day. I have not yet been out, nor know the particulars, but I should think it was on no favourable errand for them. They have lately made some high remonstrances, and three days ago he sent for their registers to Versailles. These matters, as you may suppose, occupy them much, but to me, accustomed to livelier politics, they appear flea-bites.

<sup>1</sup> Henry Scott (1746–1812), third Duke of Buccleuch, and his brother, the Hon. Hew Campbell Scott (the latter died in Paris in Oct. 1768).

<sup>2</sup> Adam Smith (1723–1790), who acted as tutor to the Duke from 1764 till 1766.

I have not heard of Lord Strafford this age, but hope he received my last of January 23rd. This is not to extort a letter from him, but to put him in mind of a very sincere humble servant of his and Lady Strafford. Of Lady Suffolk I know still less. May I beg your Ladyship to mention me to her? if I knew a syllable more than is in every gazette, I would write to her; and for my life it is so uniform, it would amuse nobody. I hope she is well, and that Marble Hill and Strawberry Hill will be as good neighbours this summer as ever.

You see, Madam, of what dabs of paragraphs I am forced to compose my letter. It is a better reason for concluding than for continuing it; but I could not resist returning my thanks for yours, and telling you, what I trust you are persuaded of, that your health is one of my first cares, and I hope will be the first of yours.

Your most faithful and devoted humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

P.S. I have this moment received a letter from Lord Strafford, for which I must beg your Ladyship would thank him, and omit what I have said before.

1100. TO JOHN CRAUFURD.

Paris, March 6, 1766.

You cannot conceive, my dear Sir, how happy I was to receive your letters, not so much even for my own sake as for Madame du Deffand's. I do not mean merely from the pleasure your letter gave her, but because it wipes off the reproaches she has undergone on your account. They have at once twitted her with her partiality for you, and your indifference. Even that silly Madame de la Valière has been quite rude to her on your subject. You will not be surprised; you saw a good deal of their falsehood and spite, and I have seen much more. They have not only the faults common to the human heart, but that additional meanness and malice which is produced by an arbitrary government, under which the subjects dare not look up to anything great.

LETTER 1100.—Collated with original in possession of Mr. John W. Ford.

The King has just thunderstruck the Parliament, and they are all charmed with the thought that they are to continue to grovel at the foot of the throne—but let us talk of something more meritorious. Your good old woman wept like a child, with her poor no eyes, as I read your letter to her. I did not wonder; it is kind, friendly, delicate and just—so just that it vexes me to be forced to continually combat the goodness of her heart, and destroy her fond visions of friendship. ‘Ah! but,’ said she at last, ‘he does not talk of returning!’ I told her, if anything could bring you back, or me either, it would be desire of seeing her. I think so of you, and I am sure so of myself. If I had stayed here still, I have learnt nothing but to know them more thoroughly. Their barbarity and injustice to our good old friend is undescribable: one of the worst is just dead, Madame de Lambert—I am sure you will not regret her. Madame de Forcalquier, I agree with you, is the most sincere of her acquaintance, and incapable of doing as the rest do—eat her suppers when they cannot go to a more fashionable house, laugh at her, abuse her, nay, try to raise her enemies among her nominal friends. They have succeeded so far as to make that unworthy old dotard the Président treat her like a dog. Her nephew, the Archbishop of Toulouse<sup>1</sup>, I see, is not a jot more attached to her than the rest, but I hope she does not perceive it so clearly as I do; Madame de Choiseul I really think wishes her well; but perhaps I am partial. The Princess de Beauvau seems very cordial too, but I doubt the Prince a little. You will forgive these details about a person you love, and have so much reason to love; nor am I ashamed of interesting myself exceedingly about her. To say nothing of her extraordinary parts, she is certainly the most generous friendly being upon earth—but neither these qualities nor her unfortunate situation touch her unworthy acquaintance. Do you know that she was quite angry about the money you left for her servants? Viar<sup>2</sup> would by no means touch it, and when I tried all I could to obtain her permission for their taking it, I prevailed so little, that she gave Viar five louis for refusing it. So I shall bring you back your draft, and you will only owe me five louis, which I added to what you gave me to pay for the two pieces of china at Dulac's, which will be sent to England with mine.

Well! I have talked too long on Madame du Deffand, and neglected too long to thank you for my own letter: I do thank you for it, my dear Sir, most heartily and sincerely. I feel all your worth and all the gratitude I ought, but I must preach to you as I do to your friend. Consider how little time you have known me, and what small opportunities you have had of knowing my faults. I know them thoroughly; but to keep your friendship within bounds, consider my heart is not like yours, young, good, warm, sincere, and impatient to bestow itself. Mine is worn with the baseness, treachery, and mercenariness I have met with. It is suspicious, doubtful, and cooled. I consider everything round me but in the light of amusement, because if I looked at it seriously, I should detest it. I laugh that I may not weep. I play with monkeys, dogs, or cats, that I may not be devoured by the beast of the Gevaudan. I converse with Mesdames de Mirepoix, Boufflers, and Luxembourg, that I may not love Madame du Deffand too much—and yet they do but make me love her the more. But don't love me, pray don't love me. Old folks are but old women, who love their last lover as much as they did their first. I should still be liable to believe you, and I am not at all of Madame du Deffand's opinion, that one might as well be dead as not love somebody. I think one had better be dead than love anybody. Let us compromise this matter; you shall love her, since she likes to be loved, and I will be the confidant. We will do anything we can to please her. I can go no farther—I have taken the veil, and would not break my vow for the world. If you will converse with me through the grate at Strawberry Hill, I desire no better; but not a word of friendship; I feel no more than if I professed it. It is paper credit, and, like other bank-bills, sure to be turned into money at last. I think you would not realize me, but how do you, or how do I know, that I should be equally scrupulous? The Temple of Friendship, like the ruins in the Campo Vaccino<sup>3</sup>, is reduced to a single column at Stowe. Those dear friends have hated one another, till some of them are forced to love one another again—and as the cracks are soldered by hatred, perhaps that cement may hold them together. You see my opinion of friendship: it would be making you a fine present to offer you mine!

<sup>1</sup> Étienne Charles de Loménie de Brienne (1727-1794), Archbishop of Toulouse, afterwards Archbishop of

Sens and a Cardinal.

<sup>2</sup> Wiart, secretary of Madame du Deffand.

Your ministers may not know it, but the war has been on the point of breaking out here between France and England, and upon a cause very English, a horse-race. Lord Forbes and Lauragais were the champions: they rode, but the second lost, his horse being ill: it died that night, and the surgeons on opening it swore it was poisoned. The English suspect that a groom, who I suppose had been reading Livy or Demosthenes, poisoned it on patriotic principles, to ensure victory to his country. The French, on the contrary, think poison as common as oats or beans, in the stables at Newmarket. In short, there is no impertinence they have not uttered, and it has gone so far, that two nights ago it was said that the King had forbidden another race which is appointed for Monday, between the Prince de Nassau and a Mr. Forth, to prevent national animosities. On my side I have tried to stifle these heats, by threatening them that Mr. Pitt is coming into the ministry again, and it has had some effect. This event has confirmed what I discovered early after my arrival, that the Anglomanie was worn out; if it remains it is manie against the English. All this, however, is for your private ear; for I have found that some of my letters home, in which I had spoken a little freely, have been reported to do me disservice. As we are not friends, I may trust to your discretion—may not I? I did not use to applaud it much.

<sup>3</sup> The Roman Forum, so called from the Middle Ages until the nineteenth century.

Perhaps it is necessary to use still more caution in mentioning me to Lord Ossory. Do it gently, for though I have great regard for him, I don't design to make it troublesome to him.

You don't say a word of our Duchess<sup>4</sup>, so superior to earthly Duchesses! How dignified she will appear to me after all the little tracasseries of Paris! I trust I shall see her soon. Packing-up is in all my quarters, but though I quit tittle-tattle, I don't design to head a squadron of mob on any side. I hate politics, as much as friendship, and design to converse at home as I have done here, with dévots, philosophers, Choiseul, Maurepas, the court, and the Temple.

<sup>4</sup> The Duchess of Grafton.

What a volume I have writ! but don't be frightened: you need not answer it, if you have not a mind, for I shall be in England almost as soon as I could receive your reply. La Geoffriniska<sup>b</sup> has received three sumptuous robes of ermines, martens and Astracan lambs, the last of which, I suppose, the Czarina had the pleasure of flaying alive herself. 'Oh! pour cela oui,' says old Brantôme, who always assents. I think there is nothing else very new: Mr. Young puns, and Dr. Gem does not: Lorenzi blunders faster than one can repeat<sup>c</sup>, Voltaire writes volumes faster than they can print, and I buy china faster than I can pay for it.

I am glad to hear you have been two or three times at my Lady Hervey's. By what she says of you, you may be comforted, though you miss the approbation of Madame de Valentinois. Her golden apple, though indeed after all Paris has gnawed it, is reserved for Lord Holderness! Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

1100*. TO GEORGE AUGUSTUS SELWYN.

Paris, March 7, 1766.

I LAUGHED till I cried at your description of Mr. Pitt, hopping, crawling, and dressing; but I took care not to publish it here, where they believe he is more alert and has longer talons than the beast of the Gevaudan. They have not dared to send a man to our boisterous colonies, for fear he should skip to New York. The Pope dare not acknowledge the Pretender while Mr. Pitt lives. Nay, one of the accusations against poor La Chalotais is that he corresponded with Mr. Pitt, to whom, though no longer a minister, they conclude a conspirator would address himself. In short, they consider him as the Chinese do the East India Company, whom they call Mr. Company. You see how true the saying is that nobody is a hero in the eyes of his own valet de chambre! In England you are all laughing at a man whose crutch keeps the rest of Europe in awe. It is now and then such a Clytus as you, that prevents a poor drunken mortal from passing for a god; for it does not signify whether they hiccup with Chian wine or vanity, nor whether they are adopted by Jupiter Ammon or Sir William Pynsent. Their heads are equally turned, and so are those of the spectators. I hope the godhead will not forget that his arm is to be lame, and knock your brains out with his crutch. When you make so free with our great men, I wonder you are so tender of our little ones; I mean our Princes. Consider that they would be still more troublesome if they were not totally insignificant.

<sup>b</sup> Madame Geoffrin.

<sup>c</sup> Lorenzi's blunders were proverbial; Grimm collected a number of them in his Correspondance Littéraire under the heading of Lorensiana.

LETTER 1100*.—Not in C.; reprinted from Jesse's Memoirs of the Life and Reign of George III, ed. 1867, vol. i. pp. 878–80.

I will endeavour to unkennel your Madame St. Jean, though, by what you hint, I believe the best way would be to address yourself to the Lieutenant de Police. I will inquire too for your Duc de Joyeuse<sup>1</sup> en Capucin, though I never heard of such a print. I have a great collection of prints after Guido at Strawberry, but do not remember such a head. I have bought a great quantity at the Quai de Ferraille, and so many other baubledoms that I should be ashamed if I did not know that la nation angloise is not quite si sage as it is reckoned here. Our stocks, however, are prodigiously fallen in this country, and I question, if Mr. Hume was to arrive now for the first time, whether he would be thought the liveliest young fellow in the world. An unfortunate horse-race, in which Lauragais' horse was poisoned, has brought great disgrace upon us. It would comfort me if Madame de Sévigné was alive to write upon the subject as she did à la Brinvilliers. However, though you do not know it certainly, I can assure you that you will come to Paris this summer. They are determined to have races, and I do not know but a deputation of Parlement (who the King intends shall have nothing else to do) may not be sent to invite Lord March and Dick Vernon over, as the ancients invited legislators. This will be à la grecque. Madame du Deffand is much pleased with the idea of your returning. She is faithful and steady to the English, though suffering persecution on that account.

<sup>1</sup> Henri, Duc de Joyeuse (1567-1608), Maréchal de France, who, after becoming a Capuchin after his wife's death, left the order in 1592 and took to a military life. He returned to the order in 1599.

I am much concerned at what you tell me of Lord Holland, and shall be sorry to find him in such a situation. I am really coming, though I divert myself well enough, and have no sort of thirst after your politics. But lilac-tide approaches, and I long as much to see a bit of green, as a housemaid does that sticks a piece of mint in a dirty phial. I don't write to Mr. Williams because writing to you is the same thing; and I forget him no more than I hope he forgets me. Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

P.S. Have you not felt a fright lately? If you have not there is no sentiment in you. Why! the Queen has been in great danger, received the viatique, and had the prières des quarante heures said for her. But be easy! She is out of danger. La Maréchale de Luxembourg saw her the night before last, and congratulating her recovery, the Queen said, 'I am too unhappy to die.'

1101. TO MISS ANNE PITT.

Paris, March 7, 1766.

THOUGH I wrote to you, Madam, but the day before yesterday by Monsieur de Lillebonne, and sent your plan, I must add a few words, as, since he set out, I have received yours, dated so long ago as February 7th; where your letter stopped to drink I do not know. However, I instantly went to Poirier's and ordered him to bring me designs of commodes. As the pieces of granite are square, there will be more difficulty in adapting them to beautiful forms, though I think this may be remedied, and will omit nothing on my part to do justice to the commission. The discovery that or moulu is not counterband interests me personally, though it will cost me a little money.

You cannot conceive how much I think myself honoured by Lord Chesterfield's approbation and with the prospect of the party you promised me, Madam, at Strawberry, whither I hope you know you have unlimited power of inviting; but if his Lordship has the least favourable opinion of me, will not the whimsical indulgence of my imagination of Strawberry destroy it all? No, I have never passed myself off for a wise person, and his Lordship has too much sense and too much good humour to quarrel with folly, that cordial drop, for that is the true cordial drop, that heaven in our cup has thrown. If it was not for the consolation of one's own folly, one might wet a dozen pocket-handkerchiefs, like Heraclitus, over the follies of others.

Madame de Rochefort has received your letter, Madam, and is so good as to say she will take no pains to execute your orders of sending me over. Is not that negative positive disobedience? Would not it detain you? Yet set out I must, though I hate your Parliament and your politics, as much as le Roi does those here. He what you call plucked up a spirit, got into his cabriolet, and drove away to the Grande Chambre t'other morning and delivered a discours that frightened them, and I believe himself too, out of their senses. They have recovered theirs a little, and have sat ever since, like a cuckoo on a chalk egg, which they can neither hatch nor abandon. There is nothing else but funeral orations, on the Dauphin, Duke of Parma, and King Stanislas. They were on the point of having another for the Queen, but she is out of danger.

My Lady Suffolk has forgot me, Mr. Brand has forgot me; for the last I suppose he thinks of nothing but the colonies, so I excuse him. He dotes upon his country and hates the French, though the latter are up to the ears in whisk and horse-races: cannot those things mollify him? Noir et tout noir is to run against Life-line next Monday, but there is some difficulty, as the Prince of Nassau insists, like a good patriot, on riding in jack-boots<sup>1</sup>.

1102. TO LADY HERVEY.

Paris, March 10, 1766.

THERE are two points, Madam, on which I must write to your Ladyship, though I have been confined these three or four days with an inflammation in my eyes. My watchings and revellings had, I doubt, heated my blood, and prepared it to receive a stroke of cold, which in truth was amply administered. We were two-and-twenty at the Maréchale de Luxembourg's, and supped in a temple rather than in a hall. It is vaulted at top with gods and goddesses, and paved with marble; but the god of fire was not of the number. However, as this is neither of my points, I shall say no more of it.

<sup>1</sup> Alluding to Lord Bute.

I send your Ladyship Lady Albemarle's box, which Madame Geoffrin brought to me herself yesterday. I think it very neat and charming, and it exceeds the commission but by a guinea and half. It is lined with wood between the two golds, as the price and necessary size would not admit metal enough without, to leave it of any solidity.

The other point I am indeed ashamed to mention so late. I am more guilty than even about the scissors. Lord Hertford sent me word a fortnight ago, that an ensigncy was vacant, to which he should recommend Mr. Fitzgerald<sup>1</sup>. I forgot both to thank him and to acquaint your Ladyship, who probably know it without my communication. I have certainly lost my memory! This is so idle and young, that I begin to fear I have acquired something of the fashionable man, which I so much dreaded. It is to England then that I must return to recover friendship and attention? I literally wrote to Lord Hertford, and forgot to thank him. Sure I did not use to be so abominable! I cannot account for it: I am as black as ink, and must turn—Methodist, to fancy that repentance can wash me white again. No, I will not; for then I may sin again, and trust to the same nostrum.

I had the honour of sending your Ladyship the funeral sermon on the Dauphin, and a tract to laugh at sermons—your bane and antidote are both before you. The first is and correspondent. After a life spent in extraordinary adventures, he was hanged for murder in June 1786.

LETTER 1102.—<sup>1</sup> Apparently George Robert Fitzgerald, son of George Fitzgerald by Lady Mary Hervey, daughter of Horace Walpole's friend

by the Archbishop of Toulouse<sup>2</sup>, who is thought the first man of the clergy. It has some sense, no pathetic, no eloquence, and, I think, clearly no belief in his own doctrine. The latter is by the Abbé Coyer<sup>3</sup>, written lively, upon a single idea; and, though I agree upon the inutility of the remedy he rejects, I have no better opinion of that he would substitute. Preaching has not failed from the beginning of the world till to-day, not because inadequate to the disease, but because the disease is incurable. If one preached to lions and tigers, would it cure them of thirsting for blood, and sucking it when they have an opportunity? No; but when they are whelped in the Tower, and both caressed and beaten, do they turn out a jot more tame when they are grown up? So far from it, all the kindness in the world, all the attention, cannot make even a monkey (that is no beast of prey) remember a pair of scissors or an ensigny.

Adieu, Madam! and pray don't forgive me, till I have forgiven myself. I dare not close my letter with any professions; for could you believe them in one that had so much reason to think himself

Your most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE?

1103. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, March 12, 1766.

I CAN write but two lines, for I have been confined these four or five days with a violent inflammation in my eyes, and which has prevented my returning to Madame Roland. I did not find her at home, but left your letter. My right eye is well again, and I have been to take the air.

<sup>2</sup> Brienne de Loménie. Walpole.

1782), author of a pamphlet called

<sup>3</sup> Gabriel François Coyer (1702-

De la Prédication.

How can you ask leave to carry anybody to Strawberry? May not you do what you please with me and mine? Does not Arlington Street comprehend Strawberry? why don't you go and lie there if you like it?

It will, I think, be the middle of April before I return; I have lost a week by this confinement, and would fain satisfy my curiosity entirely, now I am here. I have seen enough and too much of the people.

I am glad you are upon civil terms with Habihuleo<sup>1</sup>. The less I esteem folks the less I would quarrel with them.

I don't wonder that Colman and Garrick write ill in concert, when they write ill separately—however, I am heartily glad the Clive shines<sup>2</sup>. Adieu!

Commend me to Charles Street.

Kiss Fanny, and Mufti, and Ponto for me, when you go to Strawberry; dear souls, I long to kiss them myself.

1104. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, March 21, 1766.

You make me very happy in telling me you have been so comfortable in my house. If you would set up a bed there, you need never go out of it: I want to invite you, not to expel you. April the tenth my pilgrimage will end, and the fifteenth, or sixteenth, you may expect to see me, not much fattened with the flesh-pots of Egypt, but almost as glad to come amongst you again as I was to leave you.

Your Madame Roland is not half so fond of me as she tells me; I have been twice at her door, left your letter and my own direction, but have not received so much as a message to tell me she is sorry she was not at home. Perhaps this is her first vision of Paris, and it is natural for a Frenchwoman to have her head turned with it; though what she takes for rivers of emerald, and hôtels of ruby and topaz, are to my eyes, that have been purged with euphrasy and rue, a filthy stream, in which everything is washed without being cleaner, and dirty houses, ugly streets, worse shops, and churches loaded with bad pictures. Such is the material part of this paradise—for the corporeal, if Madame Roland admires it, I have nothing to say—however, I shall not be sorry to make one at Lady Frances Elliot's<sup>1</sup>. Thank you for admiring my deaf old woman<sup>2</sup>; if I could bring my old blind one<sup>3</sup> with me, I should resign this paradise as willingly as if [it] was built of opal, and designed by a fisherman, who thought that what makes a fine necklace would make a finer habitation.

LETTER 1103.—<sup>1</sup> Probably Montagu's cousin, Lord Halifax.

<sup>2</sup> In the comedy of The Clandestine

Marriage, by Garrick and Colman, recently produced at Drury Lane.

We did not want your sun; it has shone here for a fortnight with all its lustre; but yesterday a north wind, blown by the Czarina herself I believe, arrived, and declared a month of March of full age. This morning it snowed; and now, clouds of dust are whisking about the streets and quays, edged with an east wind, that gets under one's very shirt. I should not be quite sorry if a little of it tapped my lilacs on their green noses, and bade them wait for their master.

The Princess of Talmond sent me this morning a picture of two pug-dogs, and a black and white greyhound, wretchedly painted. I could not conceive what I was to do with this daub, but in her note she warned me not to hope to keep it—it was only to imprint on my memory the size, and features, and spots of Diana, her departed greyhound, in order that I might get her exactly such another. Don't you think my memory will return well stored, if it is

LETTER 1104. — <sup>1</sup> Lady Frances Nassau d'Auverquerque (d. 1772), eldest daughter of first Earl of Grantham; m. (1737) Captain Elliot.

<sup>2</sup> The Countess of Suffolk.

<sup>3</sup> Madame du Doffand.

littered with defunct lap-dogs? She is so devout that I did not dare send her word, that I am not possessed of a twig of Jacob's broom, with which he streaked cattle as he pleased.

T'other day, in the street, I saw a child in a leading-string, whose nurse gave it a farthing for a beggar; the babe delivered its mite with a grace and twirl of the hand. I don't think your cousin Twitcher's first grandson will be so well-bred. Adieu!

Yours ever,
H. W.

1105. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Paris, March 21, 1766.

You are not very just to me, my dear Sir, in suspecting me of neglecting you. Do you think Paris has turned my head, or could make me, what England never could, forget you? Was not it so when I first arrived here? and did not you find at last that it was the post's fault, not mine? What can I do if they will not carry my letters to you? I write this on a scrap of paper, because I cannot promise myself that it will have better fortune than its predecessors. If it should, know, that since the beginning of this year, I have writ to you on Jan. 7th, Feb. 11th, and March 1st. Seldomer, it is true, than when I was at home; but I had found the difficulty of making my letters reach you, and besides could send you but very imperfect accounts of what was doing there. I shall be in London by the middle of April, and then I trust our correspondence will have no more interruptions: but sure you ought to distrust anything sooner than a friendship so unalterable as mine.

We do not yet actually know the last step of the repeal of the Stamp Act, but have all reason to conclude it passed<sup>1</sup> in the most satisfactory manner for the ministry, as, on the second reading in the House of Lords, it was carried by a majority of thirty-four, though no greater majority was expected than of five or six. The bloodthirsty protested, and intended to protest again on the last stage; an evident symptom of their despair; and a most foolish step, as it is marking out their names to the odium of the nation, and delivering down an attestation of their tyrannic principles to posterity. Lord Lyttelton drew the first, and I hope it will be bound up hereafter with his Persian Letters<sup>2</sup>, to show on what contradictory principles his Lordship can oppose.

LETTER 1105.—<sup>1</sup> The repeal passed the House of Commons on March 4, 1766.

Grenville is fallen below contempt; Sandwich and his parson Anti-Sejanus<sup>3</sup> hooted off the stage. Mr. Pitt's abilities, I am told, have shone with greater lustre than ever, and with more variety. There is a report here that he has actually accepted the administration. I do not believe that he has yet, though I am sure no French wishes coined the report. I could not have believed, if I had not come hither, how much they dread him.

Well! all this paves the way to what I wish, liberty to my country and liberty to me. Tranquillity bounds my ambition. To see Grenville, and such wretches, grovelling in the mire, gilds the peaceable scene. How many wretches have I lived to see England escape! Thank God I am not philosopher enough not to be grateful for it! I would not wrestle like the savants here, against any powers beyond those of this world. I may spurn pigmies of my own size; but do not question what I cannot fathom. Gods of stone, or kings of flesh, are my derision; but of all gods that were ever invented, the most ridiculous is that old lumpish god of the Grecian sophists, whom the modern litterati want to reinstate—the god Matter. It would be like a revolution in

<sup>2</sup> Published in 1785.

<sup>3</sup> One Scott, a clergyman, employed by Lord Sandwich to write in the newspapers against Mr. Pitt. He signed his papers Anti-Sejanus. Walpole.

England in favour of the late Pretender after he was bedridden.

Soh ! Master Matter and Cardinal Matter<sup>4</sup> make a very foolish figure ! À la bonne heure !

If you receive any one of my letters, pray assure Sir James Macdonald that I have answered his ; but when they miscarry to you, I have less hopes of one reaching him. Direct your next to Arlington Street.

1106. TO GEORGE MONTAGU.

Paris, April 3, 1766.

ONE must be just to all the world : Madame Roland, I find, has been in the country, and at Versailles, and was so obliging as to call on me this morning, but I was so disobliging as not to be awake. I was dreaming dreams ; in short, I had dined at Livry ; yes, yes, at Livry, with a Langlade and De la Rochefoucaults. The abbey is now possessed by an Abbé de Malherbe, with whom I am acquainted, and who had given me a general invitation. I put it off to the last moment, that the bois and allées might set off the scene a little, and contribute to the vision—but it did not want it. Livry is situated in the Forêt de Bondi, very agreeably, on a flat, but with hills near it, and in prospect. There is a great air of simplicity and rural about it, more regular than our taste, but with an old-fashioned tranquillity, and nothing of colifichet. Not a tree exists that remembers the charming woman<sup>1</sup>, because in this country an old tree is a traitor, and forfeits its head to the crown ; but the plantations are not young, and might very well be as they were in her time. The Abbé's house is decent and smug—a few paces from it is the sacred pavilion built for

<sup>4</sup> Probably an allusion to the Pretendre and his brother Cardinal York.

LETTER 1106.—<sup>1</sup> Madame de Sévigné.

Madame de Sévigné by her uncle, and much as it was in her day; a small salon below for dinner, then an arcade, but the niches now closed, and painted in fresco with medallions of her, the Grignan, the Fayette, and the Rochefoucault. Above, a handsome large room, with a chimney-piece in the best taste of Louis the Fourteenth's time; a Holy Family in good relief over it, and the cipher of her uncle Coulanges; a neat little bedchamber within, and two or three clean little chambers over them. On one side of the garden leading to the great road is a little bridge of wood, on which the dear woman used to wait for the courier that brought her daughter's letters. Judge with what veneration and satisfaction I set my foot upon it! If you will come to France with me next year, we will go and sacrifice on that sacred spot together.

On the road to Livry I passed a new house, on the pilasters of the gate to which were two sphinxes in stone, with their heads coquetly reclined, straw hats, and French cloaks, slightly pinned, and not hiding their bubbies. I don't know whether I or Memphis would have been more diverted.

I shall set out this day se'nnight, the tenth, and be in London about the fifteenth or sixteenth, if the wind is fair.
Adieu!

Yours ever,

H. W.

P.S. I need not say, I suppose, that this letter is to Mr. Chute too.

1107. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, April 6, 1766.

IN a certain city<sup>1</sup> of Europe it is the custom to wear slouched hats, long cloaks, and high capes. Scandal and the government called this dress going in mask, and pretended that it contributed to assassination. An ordonnance was published, commanding free-born hats to be cocked, cloaks to be shortened, and capes laid aside. All the world obeyed for the first day; but the next, everything returned into its old channel. In the evening a tumult arose, and cries of 'God bless the King! God bless the kingdom! but confusion to the prime minister<sup>2</sup>.' The word was no sooner given, but his house was beset, the windows broken, and the gates attempted. The guards came and fired on the weavers<sup>3</sup> of cloaks. The weavers returned the fire, and many fell on each side. As the hour of supper approached and the mob grew hungry, they recollected a tax upon bread, and demanded the repeal<sup>4</sup>. The King yielded to both requests, and hats and loaves were set at liberty. The people were not contented, and still insisted on the permission of murdering the first minister; though his Majesty assured his faithful commons that the minister was never consulted on acts of government, and was only his private friend, who sometimes called upon him in an evening to drink a glass of wine and talk botany<sup>5</sup>. The people were incredulous, and continued in mutiny when the last letters came away. If you should happen to suppose, as I did, that this history arrived in London, do not be alarmed; for it was at Madrid: and a nation who has borne the Inquisition cannot support a cocked hat. So necessary it is for governors to know when lead or a feather will turn the balance of human understandings, or will not!

LETTER 1107. —<sup>1</sup> Madrid, where riots had taken place in consequence of an attempt to prevent the wearing of slouched hats and long cloaks.

I should not have entrenched on Lord George's<sup>6</sup> province

<sup>2</sup> Squillace, an Italian, whom the King was obliged to banish. Walpole.

<sup>3</sup> Alluding to the mobs of silk weavers which had taken place this year in London. Walpole.—The riots took place in 1765.

<sup>4</sup> Alluding to the repeal of the Stamp Act.

<sup>5</sup> An allusion to George III and Lord Bute. The latter was fond of botany.

<sup>6</sup> Lord George Lenox, only brother to the Duke of Richmond. Walpole.

of sending you news of revolutions, but he is at Aubigné<sup>7</sup>; and I thought it right to advertise you in time, in case you should have a mind to send a bale of slouched hats to the support of the mutineers. As I have worn a flapped hat all my life, when I have worn any at all, I think myself qualified, and would offer my service to command them; but, being persuaded that you are a faithful observer of treaties, though a friend to repeals, I shall come and receive your commands in person. In the meantime I cannot help figuring what a pompous protest my Lord Lyttelton might draw up in the character of an old grandee against the revocation of the act for cocked hats.

Lady Ailesbury forgot to send me word of your recovery, as she promised; but I was so lucky as to hear it from other hands. Pray take care of yourself, and do not imagine that you are as weak as I am, and can escape the scythe, as I do, by being low: your life is of more consequence. If you don't believe me, step into the street and ask the first man you meet.

This is Sunday, and Thursday is fixed for my departure, unless the Clairon should return to the stage on Tuesday se'nnight, as is said; and I do not know whether I should not be tempted to borrow two or three days more, having never seen her: yet my lilacs pull hard, and I have not a farthing left in the world. Be sure you do not leave a cranny open for George Grenville to wriggle in, till I have got all my things out of the Custom House. Adieu!

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

<sup>7</sup> The Duke of Richmond's country seat in France. Walpole.

1108. TO THE HON. HENRY SEYMOUR CONWAY.

Paris, April 8, 1766.

I SENT you a few lines by the post yesterday with the first accounts of the insurrections at Madrid. I have since seen Stahremberg, the Imperial minister, who has had a courier from thence; and if Lord Rochford has not sent one, you will not be sorry to know more particulars. The mob disarmed the Invalids; stopped all coaches, to prevent Squillaci's flight; and meeting the Duke de Medina Celi, forced him and the Duke d'Arcos to carry their demands to the King. His most frightened Majesty granted them directly; on which his Highness the people dispatched a monk with their demands in writing, couched in four articles: the diminution of the gabel on bread and oil; the revocation of the ordonnance on hats and cloaks; the banishment of Squillaci; and the abolition of some other tax, I don't know what. The King signed all; yet was still forced to appear in a balcony, and promise to observe what he had granted. Squillaci was sent with an escort to Carthagena, to embark for Naples, and the first commissioner of the treasury appointed to succeed him; which does not look much like observation of the conditions. Some say Ensenada<sup>1</sup> is recalled, and that Grimaldi is in no good odour with the people. If the latter and Squillaci are dismissed, we get rid of two enemies.

The tumult ceased on the grant of the demands; but the King retiring that night to Aranjuez, the insurrection was renewed the next morning, on pretence that this flight was a breach of the capitulation. The people seized the gates of the capital, and permitted nobody to go out. In this state were things when the courier came away. The ordonnance against going in disguise looks as if some suspicions had been conceived; and yet their confidence was so great as not to have two thousand guards in the town. The pitiful behaviour of the court makes one think that the Italians were frightened, and that the Spanish part of the ministry were not sorry it took that turn. As I suppose there is no great city in Spain which has not at least a bigger bundle of grievances than the capital, one shall not wonder if the pusillanimous behaviour of the King encourages them to redress themselves too.

LETTER 1108.—<sup>1</sup> Zenon Silva, Marquis de la Enseñada, who had been minister in the reign of Ferdinand VI.

There is what is called a change of the ministry here; but it is only a crossing over and figuring in. The Duc de Praslin has wished to retire for some time; and for this last fortnight there has been much talk of his being replaced by the Duc d'Aiguillon, the Duc de Nivernois, &c.; but it is plain, though not believed till now, that the Duc de Choiseul is all-powerful. To purchase the stay of his cousin Praslin, on whom he can depend, and to leave no cranny open, he has ceded the marine and colonies to the Duc de Praslin, and taken the foreign and military department himself. His cousin is, besides, named Chef du Conseil des Finances; a very honourable, very dignified, and very idle place, and never filled since the Duc de Béthune<sup>2</sup> had it. Praslin's hopeful cub, the Viscount<sup>3</sup>, whom you saw in England last year, goes to Naples; and the Marquis de Durfort<sup>4</sup> to Vienna—a cold, dry, proud man, with the figure and manner of Lord Cornbury.

Great matters are expected to-day from the Parliament, which reassembles. A mousquetaire, his piece loaded with a lettre de cachet, went about a fortnight ago to the notary who keeps the parliamentary registers, and demanded them.

<sup>2</sup> Paul François (1682–1759), Duc de Béthune.

<sup>3</sup> The Vicomte de Choiseul.

<sup>4</sup> Emmanuel Félicité (1715–1789), Duc de Durfort.

They were refused—but given up, on the lettre de cachet being produced. The Parliament intends to try the notary for breach of trust, which I suppose will make his fortune; though he has not the merit of perjury, like Carteret Webb.

There have been insurrections at Bourdeaux and Toulouse, on the militia, and twenty-seven persons were killed at the latter: but both are appeased. These things are so much in vogue, that I wonder the French do not dress à la révolte. The Queen is in a very dangerous way. This will be my last letter; but I am not sure I shall set out before the middle of next week.

Yours ever,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1109. TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Calais, April 20, 1766.

I AM here waiting for the tide, my dear Sir, and cannot employ my leisure better than in reviving our correspondence, which has not languished from any fault in me, but from the difficulties and dilatoriness of the French couriers, from my want of English news, and from my unwillingness to talk on our affairs in the heart of Paris. All those obstacles cease now, and you will find no change or coolness in my friendship.

Mr. Conway has been twice dangerously ill, both times from neglect. He had a scorbutic eruption, caught cold, neglected it, it turned to a high fever, he was thrice blooded, and recovered. His first sally was to his Sabine farm, whither the opposition wanted so much to send him. A deep snow fell, but he would walk out to see his improvements. The eruption, which had returned on his breast, struck in suddenly, and he fainted away; but it took a rheumatic turn, and the Duke of Richmond writes me word that he is recovering. In the meantime affairs have run into confusion. Mr. Pitt, notwithstanding he has been so much announced for coming in, has certainly not yet been treated with, and probably grows impatient, for of late he has suddenly turned his artillery against the ministry, —for who saves their country for their country's sake? I expect to find things in much disorder; but I am used to that, and grown indifferent to it.

The Hereditary Prince has landed on this side, and will make you a visit before his return. As he has left affairs unsettled, I cannot think Mr. Pitt's junction very likely, which I do not doubt but his Highness has much laboured. He will not probably be so much in fashion at Paris as he would have been two years ago. Their admiration is more worn out than the sense of their losses. Our papers say it has been discovered that France was at the bottom of the insurrections of the Whiteboys in Ireland. It is the age of revolts, and one has just broken out which she did not expect, and which is likely to tie up her best instrument. You do not hesitate, to be sure, to guess that I mean the insurrection at Madrid. Perhaps Squillace is even already landed with you. The King of Aranjuez refuses to return to his capital: sometimes he is sick, sometimes it is the season; in bigger moments, he will fix at Seville. In short, whether frightened or betrayed, he has made a wretched figure, and I have no doubt but the Spanish nobility are heartily glad he has, if they are not more.

When the Spanish diadem totters, what royal head but must ache? I would not answer, but there may be some twitches in the one<sup>1</sup> that has lately declared itself so omnipotent, and retained so much of his ancient Jesuit confessor's lessons as to distinguish between an oath to God for his people and to his people. It is such a declaration as must have made deep impressions, though the thunder has hitherto struck everybody dumb. The first moment of difficulty or disaster, the first war, will undoubtedly revive the resentment of a nation, who have chosen to crouch ; but pretended to say that it was voluntarily and from affection. For the nobility, they are to a man rejoiced ; they hate these discussions, and are glad to be eased of thinking, which is equivalent to the headache in a man of quality.

LETTER 1109.—<sup>1</sup>Louisthe Fifteenth: he had lately held a lit de justice, in which he had asserted his authority in very strong terms, and forbidden the Parliament to dispute his acts. Walpole.

You will naturally here ask me how I like France upon the whole ? So well, that I shall certainly return hither. I have received most uncommon civilities and real marks of friendship, and shall ever preserve great gratitude for them. I wish the two nations to live eternally at peace, and shall be glad to pass my time between them. My principles can never grow monarchic, but I never entered in the least into their politics. In the first place, politics were what I came hither to avoid ; and in the next, I think it indecent in a stranger to meddle with those of another country, where he is well received. Tranquillity is all I ask for the rest of my days, and I shall sedulously avoid every occasion of disturbing myself. When I reflect on how prodigious a quantity of events I have been witness to or engaged in, my life seems equal to Methuselah's. I sometimes can hardly believe that I have not lived twice ; but indeed there has been no pause to distinguish my two lives. My natural life, between an excellent constitution and the repairer gout, seems likely to add a codicil to Methuselah's.

I shall leave the rest of my paper for London, where I must pass some days before I get to Strawberry Hill, though thither my impatience is all pointed. Good night.

Wednesday, April 23rd, Arlington Street.

I arrived last night. Mr. Conway is not yet come to town, nor well, but is expected to-morrow. Mr. Pitt has kicked and cuffed to right and left, and all is disorder. I don't guess what the sediment will be!

Lord Clive has just sent us the whole kingdom of Bengal, which the Great Mogul<sup>2</sup> has yielded to this little Great Mogul without a blow. He has made an infant nabob<sup>3</sup>, and settled a regency; and when all expenses are paid there will be remitted to England yearly a million and half; we may buy another war in Germany and subsidize two or three electors, for we shall scorn to be the better for this money ourselves. East India stock is risen ten per cent. Adieu!

1110. To LORD HAILES(?).

Arlington Street, May 6, 1766.

I AM returned from Paris, Sir, and have the pleasure of having procured you all or most of the Nanteuils you wanted, with a scripture-piece by him, which is bad indeed, but extremely scarce, and which perhaps you have not got. Be so good as to let me know how to convey them to you.

I discovered the name of the person who wrote the Anecdotes des Reines de France, but I could by no method find out where he lives; I should think not in Paris. However, I have left your commission with Father Gordon, the Principal of the Scotch College, and he has promised to endeavour to search for him and procure the sonnet, if possible.

I was so ill, or so ill recovered all the winter, and the next season was so bad, that I ventured but once to the <sup>2</sup> Shah Alum had signed a warrant empowering the East India Company to collect and administer the revenues of Bengal, Orissa, and Behar.

<sup>3</sup> Najam-ud-Dowlah, a boy of eighteen, had been placed on the throne by the East India Company before Clive's arrival.

LETTER 1110.—The addressee of this letter is unknown, owing (as Cunningham states) to the loss of the cover. It was probably written to Sir David Dalrymple (Lord Hailes), who was a collector of prints by Nanteuil. See letter to him of Jan. 31, 1764.

King's Library, where their caution never suffers any fire. Mr. Hume will return to Paris, I believe, next month, and I dare to say would be very willing, as well as most capable of searching for and obtaining anything you want there.

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient humble servant,

HOR. WALPOLE.

1111. TO THE DUCHESSE DE CHOISEUL.

[6 Mai 1766.]

Je fus bien tenté, Madame, à mon retour dans mon pays, de vous marquer ma reconnaissance de toutes les bontés que vous avez daigné me prodiguer; mais votre politesse naturelle, Madame la Duchesse, m'en empêchait, et je n'osais mettre sur mon compte les grâces que vous répandez sur tout le monde,—il ne résultait pas de ce que vous m'avez été favorable que je l'eusse mérité; l'excellence de votre caractère aurait pu mettre vos lumières en défaut; je vous estimais trop, Madame, pour m'en estimer davantage. Madame du Deffand veut me persuader, car elle est très sujette à s'engouer, que vous m'aviez un peu distingué du commun, et pour preuve m'envoie votre billet; je vous en remercie très humblement, Madame la Duchesse, et quoique mon peu de mérite me rend encore très défiant sur mon propre chapitre, je n'y suis pas moins sensible. Je suis persuadé que vous vouliez faire plaisir à ma bonne amie, et j'ai trop de raisons pour l'aimer pour ne pas goûter des attentions pour elle, pour le moins autant que si elles m'eussent été adressées. Voyez, Madame, jusqu'à quel point j'honore votre caractère quand j'ose vous faire un pareil aveu. Le fils d'un premier ministre ose être sincère avec la femme d'un premier ministre. Ce n'est pas au<sup>1</sup> disgrâce des cours, mais c'est vous, Madame, qui en retirez tout l'honneur, car vous jouissez<sup>1</sup>; votre philosophie ne s'est pas attendu à se former aux leçons d'une chute; vous avez fait davantage, Madame, vous rapprochez les gens de partis opposés. J'ai eu l'honneur de causer une demie heure avec M. le Duc de Bedford sur votre chapitre; j'ai presque envie de vous raconter tout ce qu'il m'a dit sur ce sujet — mais quoiqu'on devient babillard en parlant de vous, Madame la Duchesse, je n'ose pousser trop loin la liberté que j'ai pris de vous écrire, je veux être sage pour que vous me continuiez vos bontés à mon retour. Moi qui suis un peu glorieux vis-à-vis de mes compatriotes, ne rougirais pas d'être un des courtisans de votre antichambre; il n'y a point d'Anglais qui tiendrait contre un pareil charme.

J'ai l'honneur d'être, Madame la Duchesse, votre très humble, très respectueux, et très obéissant serviteur,

HORACE WALPOLE.

1112. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

Arlington Street, May 10, 1766.

At last I am come back, dear Sir, and in good health. I have brought you four cups and saucers, one red and white, one blue and white, and two coloured; and a little box of pastils. Tell me whether and how I shall convey them to you, or whether you will, as I hope, come to Strawberry this summer, and fetch them yourself. But if you are in the least hurry, I will send them.

I flatter myself you have quite recovered your accident, and have no remains of lameness. The spring is very wet and cold, but Strawberry alone contains more verdure than all France.

<sup>1</sup> This sentence is probably corrupt; it stands thus in the copy.

I scrambled very well through the Custom House at Dover, and have got all my china safe from that here in town. You will see the fruits when you come to Strawberry Hill. Adieu !

Yours ever,

H. WALPOLE.

1113. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

Arlington Street, May 13, 1766.

I am forced to do a very awkward thing and send you back one of your letters, and, what is still worse, opened. The case was this: I received your two at dinner, opened one and laid the other in my lap; but forgetting that I had taken one out of the first, I took up the wrong, and broke it open, without perceiving my mistake, till I saw the words, Dear Sister. I give you my honour I read no farther, but had torn it too much to send it away. Pray excuse me; and another time I beg you will put an envelope, for you write just where the seal comes; and besides, place the seals so together, that though I did not quite open the fourth letter, yet it stuck so to the outer seal, that I could not help tearing it a little. Your things shall be ready whenever they are called for. Adieu !

Yours ever,

H. W.

1114. TO THE REV. WILLIAM COLE.

DEAR SIR,

If you wonder you have not received the china and pastils, I must tell you the reason. They were sent for late in the evening when I was not at home. The servant desired they might be ready by eight next morning, but did not come for them, but afterwards left word they were to go by the waggon. I knew that was not safe for the china, and would reduce the pastils to powder, and therefore did not send them. When you send for them, be so good as to let me have a day or two of notice, because I am never at home in an evening, and often out of town.

LETTER 1114.—Not in C.; printed in the 4to ed. (1818) of the Letters to Cole; now printed from original in British Museum.

The cups certainly cost but nine livres apiece, and nineteen was a mistake.

Yours ever,
H. W.

